Explanatory note from the Publisher

In Student Development 198R (Prelaw Seminar), taught by prelaw advisor Eileen Crane, BYU students have the opportunity to study a variety of specialities in law. During each 8 week course, legal professionals present their experiences in the area of law being introduced. This vocational insight is augmented by the use of an academic text which the students are tested on at the end of the course. Additionally, each semester students are required to write a scholarly paper dealing with some pertinent case or issue relating to the topic area.

In fall semester 1998, two courses were offered. One course examined church and state issues and the other studied issues affecting women in the law profession. The papers published in this journal represent the best of the student research from each course offered this year.
