MANTI TEMPLE

KARL KELLER

A faceless stone stands above my valley, pushing the broad seasons before it into millennia of green light. And the sky surrounds the stone confession of courage in an intercourse of blue voices unscarred by preposterous sky-foam of star-crossed man.
The stone is a stark sail for our eyes, set upon a sea of its own, leading our washed feet and naked souls upon the bread-strewn waters of our faith, where are carved cherrystones into stars.
