Subscribing to the BYU Children's Book Review

As the BYU Children's Book Review ends its eighth year and looks towards the ninth, may we remind you of why we think this journal is unique and might be valuable to you.

- * The 25 reviewers represent a variety of backgrounds and disciplines and review books from the vantage point of their specialties.
- * All of our reviewers are amateurs (remembering that amateur means lover of--children's literature). No professional would put up with what we have the last eight years and still keep going.
- * We review both British and American fiction and nonfiction.
- * Brigham Young University is leading the research on the use of children's books instead of basal readers to teach reading. Many of the books we review are well suited to this approach.
- * Our reviewers read to and with children and relate their reviews to practical use with children and young adults.
- * We critically analyze over 3,000 titles a year in our search for titles that are good and beautiful and which we think will stand the test of time. We are concerned with the craft and quality of writing, with consequences and ethics.

The review is published five times annually. We hope you will fill out the subscription form to subscribe for the forth coming year (or save money and subscribe for two or three years).
