Anemone

Craig Arnold

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/inscape

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/inscape/vol34/iss1/6

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in Inscape by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
ANEMONE

by Craig Arnold

Windflower wildflower the grass wears you in its hair tatter of leaf and purple star of petal How do you keep your balance in the dirt you are so frail grubbed up in the gardener's palm you wilt ing thing of an hour but still the fields fill with your sisters shivering with the wind in their thin skirts Maybe you sprang from a god's blood or a murdered lover
But I will say that the pale maiden spilled you out of her lap when she turned her face from the sun's warmth and chose the shadows but buried still you remember these seasons of gray rain this world blurred by tears are not forever soon it will all be over Soon she will come back scattering flowers before her Soon you will raise your head from the grass to praise her Oh let the sky break and the bud open oh let her bring all things to peace to the cold blue peace of spring