Emily Butler-Probst is a graduate student at the University of Colorado, Boulder with a deep passion for studying the works of Herman Melville and American Renaissance literature. She is a first-year Masters student in her program where she is focusing her research on 18th and 19th century British and American literature. Emily's interest in studying American Renaissance works, and Moby-Dick in particular, has led to multiple conference papers and an Undergraduate Honors Thesis that focuses on Melville's use of Ahab, Ishmael, and other characters in Moby-Dick to personify complex epistemological values.

Megan Clark is in her junior year at BYU. She is majoring in English with minors in Editing and Art History. She loves British literature, puns, and Mexican food. She hopes to pursue a career in editing after graduation.

Hannah E. Degn is currently finishing up her senior year at BYU with a major in English and a minor in Communications. She served a LDS mission in Lima, Peru and loves to ski and speak Spanish. After graduation, she's looking forward to moving to D.C. to pursue a career in digital marketing and social media.

Morgan Daniels was raised in Salado, Texas. As an English major with minors in both Editing and Art History, Morgan has developed her love for visual arts, museums, and literature. When not touring museums or participating in a book club, Morgan can be found taking spontaneous road trips and daydreaming about future international expeditions. After graduation in April 2018, Morgan plans to pursue her Master's degree in publishing in order to fulfill her lifelong dream of working in an internationally acclaimed publishing house.

Katie Francom is a graduating senior studying English Teaching and Italian. She is from Washington State and thus loves the rain, nature, and the color green. She is currently student teaching at Lone Peak High School and has plans to begin her teaching career in the fall.

Riley Haacke is in her senior year as an English major and Sociology and International Development minor. This summer she will be interning in Pangasinan, Philippines as a program evaluator for Liahona Children's Foundation working with malnourished youth. After graduation she hopes to join the Peace Corps and pursue graduate studies in International Development working on behalf of women's rights and education.

McKay Hansen is a junior studying English, with minors in Spanish and Editing. He enjoys improv comedy, piano accompaniment, and of course reading and writing. He hopes to become a research professor of literature in order to further explore the impact of the Renaissance and the Reformation on spiritual experience and understandings.

Alexandra Malouf has delusions about making art for a living. She is an English major who spends her weekends practicing wilderness survival, photography, and swing dancing.

Elizabeth Peek is an English major in her senior year at BYU. She likes to read and write poetry and creative nonfiction. After graduation in April, she plans to build her poetry portfolio and work for a year, while applying to MFA programs in creative writing.

Scott Peeples is Professor of English at the College of Charleston. He has written numerous articles on nineteenth-century American literature and published two books on Edgar Allan Poe—Edgar Allan Poe Revisited and The Afterlife of Edgar Allan Poe. He currently serves on the editorial board of the Edgar Allan Poe Review and is a consulting editor for Poe Studies.

Genevieve Pettijohn is an English Teaching major with a Music minor. She is currently working as an English TA at BYU Independent Study, and she volunteers in Provo schools through Y-Serve.

Audrey Saxton is an undergraduate at BYU with a major in English and minors in both Latin and Women Studies. She currently works at the University Writing Center and hopes to continue her studies of literature at the graduate level.

Brittany Twigg was born and raised in Swayzee, Indiana, and she is a senior English and Writing double major at Indiana Wesleyan University. With the recent addition of a Journalism minor, she has grown interested in news reporting and narrative journalism. After graduation in April, she will marry her best friend, Kole, and plans to begin her career as a freelance writer.
