Sylvia Cutler-Laboulaye is a graduate student in the English MA program at BYU. As a recent graduate in English, French, and Women's Studies, Sylvia's current research interests include French feminist theory and the role of the erotic in expressions of female subjectivity in literature.

Conor B. Hilton is a MA student at BYU, specializing in nineteenth-century British Literature and the post-secular. He hails from Idaho Falls, ID, but has earlier roots in Boston, MA. He plans on pursuing a PhD to further his scholarly interests.

Rebekah Hood is a recent graduate of BYU's Master of Arts program in English and wrote her thesis on mental illness theory in "The Yellow Wallpaper." Her other research interests include gender and domesticity, book history, disability studies, and psychoanalytic literary criticism.

Alex Hugie is an English major at BYU from Keizer, Oregon, with editing and creative writing minors. He has particular interests in studying YA literature, murdering comma splices, writing wonky short stories and novels, and drinking milk.

Erika Larsen is from Danville, California, and is currently a senior at BYU studying English Teaching. She is passionate about feminist studies and thoroughly enjoyed learning about the rhetoric of women's emancipation in her English 495 class, which inspired her paper.

Jessica Pope Mudrow graduated with a degree in English and a minor in TESOL (Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages). She enjoys reading, playing board games, and spending time with her husband and daughter. Her favorite BYU ice cream is Raspberries and Cream Cheese, though she has never met an ice cream she didn't like.

Camille Pay graduated from BYU with a BA in English Teaching in April 2017. While at BYU, she participated in the 2015 and 2017 BYU English Symposia and graduated a member of Phi Eta Sigma. She is now teaching seventh-grade English and Reading Skills at Vista Heights Middle School in Saratoga Springs, Utah.

Rachel Rackham graduated from BYU in April 2017 with a major in English and a minor in European Studies. She is currently a first-year graduate student at the University of Iowa, where she is pursuing her MA in Library and Information Sciences. An avid reader, she looks forward to her next literary adventures that are inspired by her love of British Romantic and Victorian literature.

Joshlin Sheridan is an English major in her senior year at BYU. In addition to studying literature and creative writing, she also enjoys studying psychology and classic films. She currently works at the University Writing Center and is passionate about helping others express their ideas through writing.
