2016-04-06

Maoist Women Voices

Marcos Gallo
Brigham Young University - Provo, marcosfeng@hotmail.com

Amber Bullock
Brigham Young University - Provo, akabullock@gmail.com

Scott Sweeten
Brigham Young University - Provo, scottsweeten22@gmail.com

Stéfanie J. Morris
Brigham Young University - Provo, stefjmorris@gmail.com

Joshua D. Sims
Brigham Young University - Provo, joshua.david.sims@gmail.com

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/fhssconference_studentpub

The Annual Mary Lou Fulton Mentored Research Conference showcases some of the best student research from the College of Family, Home, and Social Sciences. The mentored learning program encourages undergraduate students to participate in hands-on and practical research under the direction of a faculty member. Students create these posters as an aide in presenting the results of their research to the public, faculty, and their peers.

BYU ScholarsArchive Citation
Gallo, Marcos; Bullock, Amber; Sweeten, Scott; Morris, Stéfanie J.; and Sims, Joshua D., 'Maoist Women Voices' (2016). FHSS Mentored Research Conference. 290.
https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/fhssconference_studentpub/290

This Poster is brought to you for free and open access by the Family, Home, and Social Sciences at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in FHSS Mentored Research Conference by an authorized administrator of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Chairman Mao

Communist Reform

Mao Zedong said, “A man in China is usually subjected to the domination of three systems of authority... Women, in addition... are also dominated by the men.” While Mao promised freedom and equality for women, government inefficiency and social inertia impeded meaningful change. Women in Communist China under the rule of Mao Zedong found their voice through civic activity because communist reform policies failed to instate gender equality.

“Women must participate on an equal footing in all work useful to the war effort and to social progress” – Chairman Mao

In 1950, the CCP’s New Marriage Act outlawed forced marriages and polygamy, seeking to address systematic oppression of women.

REALITY

Women continued to be marginalized and mistreated despite Communist reforms.

While Communist policy did encourage equal integration of women into the workforce, they continued to face discrimination. Promises of equal wages, for instance, failed to pay out. In rural areas, administrators considered women to be less strong and skilled, resisting directives to award equal pay.

Despite promised reform, women were still confined to stereotypical gender roles in industrial activity.

Red Guard

In a time when economic concerns and cultural prejudices excluded women from education, Red Guard participation provided “a legitimate role for women within the urban educational system” (Andors 105). In an ideological sense, this legitimization worked against traditional stereotypes and conceptions of women. In a practical sense, the Red Guard provided women with training and industrial skills previously restricted to men (Andors 110). Young women normally oppressed by tradition gained the opportunity to travel throughout China (Jiang 5).

Civil Engagement

Where government support was weak, strong women took initiative to influence society. Women formed social organizations and cooperatives to forward their goals.

Cai Chang, 1900-1990, became the founding president of the All China Women Federation in 1949. Though she had to closely follow Communist Party policies, she used her position to secure rights for women throughout China.

Women were underrepresented in the closed-membership Chinese Communist Party, but their high involvement in the voluntary Communist Youth League of China shows their enthusiasm for civil engagement. This chart shows male and female participation in each group by age.

Bibliography