EDITOR'S NOTE

The Pi Sigma Alpha Review, edited and published by students at Brigham Young University, features scholarly essays in the areas of American Government, Political Philosophy, Justice Administration, International Relations, Public Policy, and Comparative Politics.

The purpose of The Review is to augment the educational experience of Brigham Young University students by providing noteworthy scholarly work the exposure it deserves. In this way, The Review serves to stimulate fruitful controversy and enhance the understanding of intricate issues. Its format is intended to encourage readers' reflections and rejoinders--a healthy exchange of ideas can occur--an exchange that promotes new lines of communication.

With a forum of student thought, students are encouraged to refine work initiated in courses, but without the deadlines and constraints which a semester-long course must impose. Since The Review accepts scholarly and analytic papers at various times throughout the year, students are free to exhaust the resources of the academic community at large and to develop their ideas as fully as their interests dictate.

The editors hope that The Review will continue to provide a distinctive learning experience not often found at the undergraduate level of higher education.
