EDITOR IN CHIEF & MANAGING EDITOR'S NOTE

We are both honored and humbled by the privilege to oversee the publication of the 2020 edition of the Brigham Young University Prelaw Review. As new legal issues arise each year, we feel it is essential for students to understand and add their voices to these important issues and debates. We believe the 2020 Prelaw Review staff have met this goal through their hard work and commitment. We feel the innovative claims in each article are capable of enlightening and broadening the reader's perspective. They add to relevant conversations on legal topics ranging from education to gender reassignment in prison, from labor law to contracts.

Authors and editors for this year's Prelaw Review were selected in July of 2019. In their applications authors submitted drafts and abstracts with proposed arguments in their relevant areas of research. They were later paired with an editor to assist them in the writing process. Then, with the help of their editors, authors spent the next several months researching, writing, refining arguments. Throughout this process each partnership overcame numerous challenges as they worked to improve their arguments. The result is truly a tribute to their desires and vision.

Each team sought the guidance of legal professionals and professors to better understand and address their topics. We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to everyone who took the time to help lift this journal to a higher plane of quality. We wish to thank Taylor Peterson and Neal Hillam for their invaluable efforts in bringing this all together as well as the week by week support of editing, reading and revising. We are extremely grateful to Kris Tina Carlston for her time and effort in behalf of this journal as well as her excellent sense of humor. Finally, we wish to thank Laura Bean for formatting each paper prior to publication.

It is with great pleasure we present the 2020 edition of the Brigham Young University Prelaw Review. We wish all those involved the best of luck in their future endeavors and goals.
