EDITOR IN CHIEF & MANAGING EDITOR'S NOTE

During this unprecedented year, we have been honored to continue a tradition of scholarship with the publication of the 2021 edition of the Brigham Young University Prelaw Review. This year's topics are grounded in issues on the cutting edge of legal thought, ranging from the legal liability of corporate supply chains to the thorny conundrum of internet censorship, and from the intersection of property law and religious liberty to the question of statehood admission.

This publication is a testament to the hard work and dedication of this year's staff. Authors and editors were selected in July 2020, and since that time, they have honed their ideas and claims through devoted study and healthy debate. After selecting their topics, authors and editors worked together to research and craft their papers. They effectively navigated the hurdles of new case law and counter opinions, adapting their arguments to present the soundest claims possible. Ultimately, these articles represent the academic resilience and undeterred scholarship of the authors who wrote them and the editors who polished them. We are confident that each piece will bring new awareness and deeper understanding of pertinent legal issues of our day.

We would like to extend our gratitude to all who contributed to this year's volume of the Prelaw Review. Some staff members sought out the assistance of professors and legal scholars to glean expert insight into specific legal disciplines. Without the assistance of these professors and scholars, this final product would not have been possible, and we are grateful for the generous donation of their time. We also extend a special thanks to the members of the editorial board—Alix Brobbey, Jared Lockhart, and Kaity Marquis—for their patience, dedication, and honest feedback that contributed to each author's paper and the success of the review as a whole. Additionally, we express immense gratitude to Kris Tina Carlston for her unceasing efforts to uphold the rigor and prestige of this review, despite the curveballs of this tumultuous year. She has been the most tremendous asset to our team. We would also like to thank the faculty and staff of Brigham Young University's J. Reuben Clark Law School for the many resources they provided us. Lastly, we express appreciation to Laura Bean who formatted all the papers for final production.

It is with great pleasure that we present the 2021 edition of the Brigham Young University Prelaw Review. We wish all those involved the best of luck in all endeavors they will pursue.
