

4-1-1999

Contributors

AMCAP Journal

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/irp>

Recommended Citation

Journal, AMCAP (1999) "Contributors," Issues in Religion and Psychotherapy: Vol. 24 : No. 1 , Article 23.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/irp/vol24/iss1/23>

This Back Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in Issues in Religion and Psychotherapy by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Contributors

MATTHEW DRAPER is Assistant Professor of Counseling at Indiana State University. He received a B.S. in psychology from Brigham Young University and an M.A. in counseling and a Ph.D. in counseling psychology from the University of Texas at Austin. His research interests include theory and philosophy of psychotherapy, issues of spirituality and religion in counseling, and therapy process and outcome. He has published articles on counseling outcome as well as connectedness in counseling.

LANE FISCHER is Dean of Students at Brigham Young University. He received a B.S. in psychology and an M.S. in educational psychology from Brigham Young University and a Ph.D. in educational psychology from the University of Minnesota. His research interests in psychotherapy include integration of spirituality and psychotherapy as well as assessment of adolescent psychopathology. He has published articles in the areas of assessment of adolescents and also religion and adolescent development. He is the former president of the Association of Mormon Counselors and Psychotherapists.

EDWIN E. GANTT is Assistant Professor of Psychology at Brigham Young University. He received a B.S. in psychology teaching from Brigham Young University, and an M.A. in psychology and a Ph.D. in clinical psychology from Duquesne University. His research interests include personality theories, the philosophy of science and psychotherapy, and moral dimensions of counseling and clinical practice. He has published many articles in the field of psychotherapy and recently co-edited with Richard Williams the book Psychology for the Other: Levinas, Ethics, and the Practice of Psychology. He was recently awarded the Sigmund Koch Award for Early Career Contributions to Psychology by Division 24 (Theoretical and Philosophical Psychology) of the American Psychological Association.

ROBERT GLEAVE is a Psychologist and Clinical Professor in the Counseling and Career Center and the Counseling Psychology and Special Education Department at Brigham Young University. He received a Ph.D. in counseling psychology from Brigham Young University. His research interests include group psychotherapy and the application of religious and philosophical thought to psychotherapy. He has given many paper presentations under the topic of psychotherapy, and some of his ideas have been presented at Brigham Young University's Education Week.

AARON P. JACKSON is Assistant Professor of Counseling Psychology and Special Education at Brigham Young University. He received a B.S. in psychology and an M.S. in counseling from Brigham Young University and a Ph.D. in counseling psychology from the University of Missouri. He has published articles on the topics of career development of American Indians, family-friendly careers, and philosophies of counseling. His research interests include counseling theory and philosophy as well as career counseling.

DANIEL K. JUDD is Chair and Associate Professor of Ancient Scripture at Brigham Young University. He received a B.S. in zoology and chemistry at Southern Utah University and an M.S. in family studies and a Ph.D. in counseling psychology at Brigham Young University. He has done clinical work in the field, and he enjoys writing and conducting research on psychology. He has published many articles and chapters in the topic of psychotherapy as well as the books Religion, Mental Health, and the Latter-day Saints and The Simplesness of the Way.

RANDY K. MOSS is the son of DeVor and Marjory Moss and brother to Kevin and Darin. He is father to Elliot, Taylor, Cambria, and Madison and best friend to Nancy. He received a masters in counseling from the University of Utah and his Ph.D. in counseling psychology from Brigham Young University. He is currently a consulting psychologist in Alaska. He is actively engaged in directing research and training that deals with the whole person in a complex world. He is director of the Co-Occurring Disorders Institute and principle evaluator for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Healthy

Nations Initiative, a project addressing substance-related challenges among American Indians and Native Alaskans. He enjoys teaching, training, and working with change agents in systems to transform service provision and clinical perspectives. He is interested in metaphysics, moral ethics, and the ways of knowing. He is particularly curious about the intersection of religion, philosophy, psychology, and human relations. Randy is constantly on a voyage of discovery and inspection. He finds the beauty of Alaska, its ruggedness and raw nature, a fecund ground for growth and for experiencing the Divine.

JEFFREY S. REBER is Assistant Professor of Psychology at State University of West Georgia. He received his Ph.D. in psychology with an emphasis in theoretical/philosophical psychology and applied psychology from Brigham Young University. His research interests include the assumptions and consequences of eclectic psychotherapy, the nature and importance of truth in psychotherapy, and the implications of a relational ontology for psychotherapeutic practice. He has also produced theoretical work on a variety of topics with important implications for the practice of psychotherapy, such as the possibility and significance of altruism, the limitations of evolutionary psychology, and the meaning of relational ethics and spirituality.

P. SCOTT RICHARDS is Professor of Counseling Psychology and Special Education. He received a Ph.D. in counseling psychology from the University of Minnesota. Dr. Richards is co-author of A Spiritual Strategy for Counseling and Psychotherapy (1997) and Handbook of Psychotherapy and Religious Diversity, both of which were published by the American Psychological Association (APA). He was given the dissertation of the year award in 1990 from Division 5 (Evaluation, Statistics, and Measurement) of APA for his psychometric investigation of religious bias in moral development research. In 1999, he was awarded the William C. Bier Award from Division 36 (Psychology of Religion) of the APA for an outstanding contribution to findings on religious issues. Dr. Richards is a licensed psychologist and maintains a small, private psychotherapy practice at the Center for Change, in Orem, Utah.

BRENT D. SLIFE is the chair of the doctoral program in Theoretical and Philosophical Psychology at Brigham Young University. He also currently has a private practice consisting primarily of marriage and family therapy. He received a B.A. in philosophy and psychology from William Jewell College and an M.S. and Ph.D. in clinical psychology from Purdue University. He has been the Director of Clinical Training on two occasions while at Baylor University, and he continues to supervise doctoral students in clinical psychology at BYU. He has published over one hundred articles in the area of psychotherapy.

AMY FISHER SMITH is Assistant Professor of Psychology at the University of Dallas. She received a Ph.D. in clinical psychology from Brigham Young University and is actively involved in the Society for Theoretical and Philosophical Psychology, a division of the American Psychological Association. Her research interests and publications have focused on the theory-driven aspects of psychotherapy, ethics, and the role of psychotherapist values in therapy.

TIMOTHY B. SMITH is Associate Professor of Counseling Psychology at Brigham Young University. Prior to this appointment, he was Assistant Professor of Psychology at the University of South Dakota and an intern at the University of Pennsylvania. His research interests include spirituality and mental health, intergroup relations, and identity development from a relational perspective. He is the editor of the book Practicing Multiculturalism, and he has published over forty manuscripts as book chapters or journal articles in such outlets as the Journal of Consulting and Clinical Psychology. Tim serves on the editorial boards of three professional journals and is the editor of the Journal of College Counseling.

RICHARD WILLIAMS is Associate Academic Vice President of Faculty at Brigham Young University. He received a Ph.D. in personality and social psychology from Purdue University. His research interests include the theoretical, philosophical, and moral underpinnings of the social science that spawned and continues to support and justify counseling and psychotherapy. He has published articles relating to the biologization of psychology and other articles on religion and mental health.

*Turning
Freud
Upside
Down*

STEPHEN C. YANCHAR is Assistant Professor of Instructional Psychology and Technology at Brigham Young University. He received a B.A. in psychology from Cleveland State University and an M.S. in general psychology and a Ph.D. in theoretical psychology from Brigham Young University. His research interests include learning and cognition, mental imagery, and theoretical issues in psychology.