I pad through bars
of yellow light and dark, softly up and up
the iron escape,
four floors to a lead-
lined window in heavy door where I count three brass numbers that equal your space, a spatial equation without variables over the finger-smudged knob.
A slide of light clicks under the frame:
you're home.
