

Religious Educator: Perspectives on the Restored Gospel

Volume 17 | Number 2

Article 1

2016

Front Matter

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/re>

BYU ScholarsArchive Citation

"Front Matter." Religious Educator: Perspectives on the Restored Gospel 17, no. 2 (2016). <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/re/vol17/iss2/1>

This Front Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in Religious Educator: Perspectives on the Restored Gospel by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Editor's Note

A Positive Trend in Scholarship

Welcome to this edition of the Religious Educator. Having personally read and pondered each article, I can confirm that there are many genuine insights, fresh approaches, and engaging conversations. This edition of the journal caused me to pause to consider a positive trend in LDS scholarship. The increased focus on historical sources by LDS historians seems to have created a wave of interest in revisiting all religious texts with renewed attention. I see this in particular in the articles on William Tyndale, the Gospel of Mark, and the injunction for early Church leaders to travel (or not). In this same light, a team of scholars led by Brad Wilcox considers the question of authorship of the Book of Mormon using a relatively new and experimental technique, and their findings are presented here for the first time in print.

In this issue is the second installment in our Discussing Difficult Topics series and the second in our Global Pioneers series. The discussion of difficult topics treats the issue of developing a woman's narrative in teaching, and helping broaden the realization that there is a paucity of examples of women's voices in scripture and how teachers might remedy this deficiency. Our Global Pioneers entry offers a perspective on the rise of the Church in Italy in the modern era. Using the lens of personal reflection, this article discusses the dynamics of youth conversion in a European context as well as confronting the issue of maintaining a narrow and relatively unique religious identity.

At the request of Dale LeBaron's family, Casey Griffiths published a posthumous study drawing upon Dale's historic and ethnographic work. That study presents some of the important work that Dale did before his passing.

I hope you enjoy reading these articles as much as I have enjoyed working with these authors and watching these excellent contributions develop into print publications. We also continue to promote the other works of RSC authors, including those whose works appear in this issue of the journal, on our website, and through our newsletter (see rsc.byu.edu).

Thomas A. Wayment

Editor-in-chief

Contents
Religious Educator VOLUME 17 NUMBER 2 2016

Keeping Memory

Elder James J. Hamula and J. Spencer Fluhman

Traveling and Standing Ministers: The Commandment to Travel (or Not) in the Joseph–Smith Era Revelations

Reid L. Neilson

Absence of “Joseph Smith” in the Book of Mormon: Lack of the Name Letter Effect in Nephite, Lamanite, and Jaredite Names

Sharon Black, Brad Wilcox, Wendy Baker Smemoe, and Bruce L. Brown

Mark’s Unique Contribution

Julie M. Smith

William Tyndale, John Foxe, and the “Boy That Driveth the Plough”

Jan J. Martin

Discussing Difficult Topics: The Representation of Women in Today’s Church

Neylan McBaine and Thomas A. Wayment

Perspectives from the Global Expansion of Latter-day Saint Religious Education

Casey Paul Griffiths and E. Dale LeBaron

In the Footsteps of Peter and Paul: Modern Pioneers in Italy

Mauro Properzi

The Adolescent Brain and the Atonement: Meant for Each Other, Part 2: The Rescue

Mark H. Butler and Genevieve L. Smith