

3-1-2003

On Tenille and Nat as I watched From the Bathroom Mirror

Jenny R. Griffin

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/inscape>

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation

Griffin, Jenny R. (2003) "On Tenille and Nat as I watched From the Bathroom Mirror," Inscape: Vol. 23 : No. 1 , Article 16.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/inscape/vol23/iss1/16>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in Inscape by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

On Tenille and Nat as I watched from the Bathroom Mirror

jenny rebecca griffin

They laugh together, just two of them—they laugh like they are mad-crazy at something I know if I asked, it wouldn't be funny because it is between him and her.

In the mirror my stomach bulges pregnantly as I watch; it increases in size and in resemblance to all the cakes I must have eaten in my life.
I turn sideways to assess.

She sits in his lap and curls her fingers into his malleable hair, gently holds, massages his arms as if to say nothing has ever fit more perfectly in her hands.
One arm and then the other.

I brush my teeth to a dismal pulse, incessant stresses of tedium, ignoring the toothpaste dribbling down my chin.

He sings bluntly into the serene night. She nestles next to him, close enough that her heart's cadence becomes his metronome, her breath now feeding his music.

I think there is more to me than this face and body.

I pant as I reach my tongue out as long as it will go, try to see past the mirror's fabricated copy of my face, into the blackness of my throat.