CONTRIBUTORS

FRANK CHRISTIANSON is a first-year Master's student at Brigham Young University. His current emphasis is creative writing, but he is also interested in contemporary theory and literature. As an undergraduate, Christianson studied English and played on the BYU football team.

MICHAEL MITTON, a Salem, Oregon, native, studies economics and philosophy at BYU. He plans on pursuing a Ph.D. in economics. Mitton is a previous winner of an Inscape contest and won second place in the David H. Yarn Essay Contest in 1994.

DAVID PACE is finishing a Master's Degree in American literature and creative writing. After his April graduation, Pace plans on either law school or a doctoral program. He has a novel in progress titled Clear Friends and was a fiction winner in the Vera Hinckley Mayhew contest.

TRACI OBERG graduated in English from BYU in December, and although she is still undecided as far as graduate work is concerned, Oberg knows she wants to write. Oberg has won previous Inscape contests and published a story in an earlier issue of Inscape. In addition to her writing, she is busy hosting a radio show and coaching basketball at Provo High School.

DEREK OTSUJI graduated with a double major in English and Japanese and is now a first-year Master's student at BYU. Otsuji was awarded the Hinckley Scholarship, the Thomas Award from the English Department, and an honorable mention prize in the 1994 Vera Hinckley Mayhew poetry contest.

KRISTEN TRACY did her undergraduate work at Loyola Marymount University and is currently pursuing her Master's at BYU. A native of Ucon, Idaho, Tracy taught high school in the Los Angeles inner city before beginning graduate work. Her poetry has appeared in L.A. Miscellany and the Student Review.

CASUALENE MEYER is currently pursuing a Ph.D. at the University of Southern Mississippi. She recently completed her Master's with a creative writing emphasis at BYU, where she also did her undergraduate work. Meyer has won numerous poetry contests at BYU, most notably the 1994 Hart-Larson Poetry Contest.

MICHAEL SMITH has studied at BYU where his fiction has earned honors. Smith's story, Luci and Lujean's, won first prize in the 1994 Vera Hinckley Mayhew Fiction Contest. Smith currently resides in Salt Lake City, Utah.

ELISSA MINOR, a native of Lake Oswego, Oregon, is a freshman at BYU An English major, Minor plans on a Ph.D. and a career writing poetry. She admires the work of William Stafford, another Lake Oswego native, and John Ashberry.

ADAM BLACKWELL did his undergraduate work in Norwich, England, in theater and film and is currently working on his Master's at BYU. Blackwell won the Vera Hinckley Mayhew Playwriting Contest for his play, The Absent One. Another of Blackwell's plays, Blind Dates, was a finalist in the 1994 Siena International Playwrights Competition. Blackwell has been the BYU Playwright of the Year for the last two years.

CHRIS TALBOT grew up in the Washington, D.C., area and plans to return there this spring when he graduates with a B.S.A. in photography. Talbot's photos in this issue came from a special projects class and were later displayed in a show titled "The Ends of the Earth." His collection won an Undergraduate Research and Creative Work Award at BYU in 1994. Some of these photos won a Jurors Choice Award in the BYU Student Art Show in 1994 and were also exhibited in the 1994 Intercollegiate Art Show.
