Golgotha's Dawn Comes Ever Slow

When my heart breaks for sudden hurt to death for pride,
The death-pain's late. At the piercing tide
My spirit shrivels—shamed—but blessed blind
I live the dying. Dark is kind.

Unfrocking will waits—weak—awake,
Want's harsh glare bites. I writhe—
Pull back—and, loathing, shrink
The tearing vivisection's brink.

Penance prongs me. Why stand I still?
Who thorns me—docile
Dumb?
Who crucifies me? Who dares?
Is't I? Pride? Other's wares?
Stiff seconds scourge . . . and seethe . . . and—kill—
Come
You, little empty ones— Come
Stroke the red raw resurrected flesh—
Come, stroke my life—

Stumble, thou dumbweightedcorpse—
Self-willedbleedingspirit, stumble. . . .
Spread coldbludgeoned—stark—displayed
Nakedhanging . . . death, afraid. . . .

Lord, whence comes the blow?
Above? Below?
Who shafts it?
Is't I, Lord?

The light's too bright.
My heart hurts. Oh—
Golgotha's dawn comes ever slow

For me—

And painful—
