BYU Studies Quarterly

Volume 28 | Issue 3

Article 7

7-1-1988

Lombardy Poplars

John S. Harris

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Harris, John S. (1988) "Lombardy Poplars," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 28 : Iss. 3 , Article 7. Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol28/iss3/7

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Lombardy Poplars

They lined both sides of streets In older Utah towns And bordered close-in fields— Planted no further apart than fence posts— As alien in the West as settlers were.

Their thick-ribbed trunks and heart-shaped leaves Marked them kin to native cottonwoods, But with that peculiar spire-like form That spaced so close, quickly Made a hedge fifty feet tall.

It was always said that they Were planted as windbreaks.

And true, the sweep of wind Through empty valleys Could do with some impediment.

But was it that the Eastern men Emerging from their forest groves That ever blocked the distant view Found the scale just too immense And needed walls against the space.

—John S. Harris

John S. Harris is a professor of English at Brigham Young University.