King-Smith has written many delightful stories, most of which have been chapter books for ages 8-10 (or anyone who likes his stories). The Twin Giants is a story for early readers, and has many clever pictures to support the action described in the text.

Lottavim and Normus look alike and do everything the same. They play games together, read together, and share illnesses, even sneezing at the same time. They differ in one way though—Lottavim likes meat, and Normus likes vegetables.

As they get older they find that being so much alike makes searching for a wife a difficult togetherness activity. When they both fall in love with the same attractive giantess, it is decided that they will do their courting separately. Eventually they find the loves of their lives and start giant families of their own, but they still remain close.
