Lists of Selected Full-text Databases by Subscription in East Asian Studies

Compiled and edited by Vickie Fu Doll, University of Kansas

Chiaki Sakai, Columbia University

This supplement is comprised of three database lists:

- 1) 142 E-Book Database modules by Subscription,
- 2) 99 E-Journal Database modules by Subscription, and
- 3) 20 Audio-Visual Multi-Media Database modules by Subscription

These databases and database modules were subscribed by East Asian collections in North America in 2021. Each list covers Chinese, Japanese, Korean, and Non-CJK language databases. In total, 261 database modules are included in these three lists as of December 2021. Each list consists of the following columns: (1) English Title, (2) CJK Title, (3) Romanized Title, (4) Subtitle/Module, (5) Languages, (6) Sub-series, (7) Publisher, (8) Description/source, (9) Title counts, and/or (10) Title/Volume/Chapter counts.

For the convenience of readers in North America, the commonly accepted title of the database usually takes precedence over the database's original name. For example, CHANT is a known abbreviation for Chinese Ancient Texts Database 漢達文庫; therefore, the abbreviated name is listed first, with the English and Chinese titles next to it. The same format is applied to the Vendor and Publisher columns.

These lists were collaborative work by CEAL members who have contributed to the compilation, editing, and review of the content. Chiaki Sakai, Japanese Studies Librarian and Chair of the Committee on Japanese Materials, reviewed all the Japanese databases. Michiko Ito (Japanese Studies Librarian, University of Kansas) also verified contents with vendors of Japanese databases. Susan Xue (U.C. Berkeley and the Chair of the UC System CJK E-Resources Task Force) contributed content counts for the University of California system's Chinese database subscriptions.

In 2021, a new customization function was enabled for members to add a database by subscription that is not included in the existing lists. This function allows member libraries to add some less popular or new databases to which they subscribed during the survey year. In this report, we excluded databases that were created locally by member libraries that were not commercially subscribed. However, in the counting of content accessed, locally created database contents were counted for each library's local statistics.

These e-resources are not an inventory of what databases are available in the market but which were subscribed to by East Asian collections in North America. The lists reveal the approximate count of e-Journal titles, eBook titles, volumes, or media titles that a library has access to. These lists inform librarians and interested users of what is subscribed to, how much content they can access, where money was spent, whether the content is updated, and how they were compiled and offered.

Above all, the lists serve as a guide for the comparison of subscribed e-resources and can empower the decision-making process for e-resource selection. This content data is essential for making informed collection development assessments, budget negotiation with administration, bargaining with vendors, and providing cost-effective user services.

In recent years, some archival and documentary databases that include multiple formats (text, manuscripts, videos, photos, maps, etc.) have become difficult for content count using the current e-resource list classification. However, it is important from the collection development aspect to keep track of not only the subject and format but also the content inclusion for any commercial products that are subscribed to. We have been keeping those multi-formats in the audio-visual multi-media category. We welcome your input on how to treat databases that are collected by a certain subject, timeframe, event, or ownership and not by material format.
