Beverly Custard

Her hand, egg-shell brown-smooth clean crushing eggs, counter-click of half shells yolks filling with white and air, wire whisk caging them in and out, speckling sun-specks on her wrist tap water foaming powder to milk, wide line diving splashless from the pitcher sugar and spice between granules and vanilla splash, old bruise fading on the surface of sugar egg milk—stirred, strained, tapped with nutmeg, starfield of spice set to baking water coming sweet warm with custard scoops the texture of abdomen skin after six children
