states of grace

the cold riverbank
hazel and silver after rain cattails dripping the almost stillness

liquid streaks
down trunks of bare trees faint trickle of the familiar

where we walk two together and each
apart

distant houses shrink and darken in the orchid twilight overripe in the west
clouds bruise
into night edges tinging
an afterlife

thirty years and no words as faithful
as an ordinary solitude

our breath geysering
before us brown grasses
sheened by the rains
