

10-1-1997

Sage Junction

Dixie Partridge

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq>

Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Partridge, Dixie (1997) "Sage Junction," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 37 : Iss. 4 , Article 12.

Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol37/iss4/12>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Sage Junction

We drive the two-lane highway
after a downpour, black storm moving easterly, sun slanting into whole spectrums of gray
edged sterling in light through rain.
The downhill road toward Idaho glints
like a long trout, and from Wyoming
the highway steams faintly where a semi,
streak of silver, speeds through with its shaft of wind.

I open windows to the tremble and breathe deeply: the durable gears of memory lean with my father's truck taking the curve;
then the downshift to winter peril the school year
a whole family died on this route linking rival basketball teams.
We gather speed in the wet desert northward,
fragrances arcing through time:
I leave for school and Grandmother
hands me bread fried in butter, sprinkled with sugar . . . in a scent of sage white curtains of her kitchen
rise like a loaf.

—Dixie Partridge