BYU Studies Quarterly

Volume 41 | Issue 1

Article 17

1-1-2002

New under the Sun: Awaiting a Birth

Dixie Partridge

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Partridge, Dixie (2002) "New under the Sun: Awaiting a Birth," BYU Studies Quarterly: Vol. 41 : Iss. 1 , Article 17. Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol41/iss1/17

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

New under the Sun Awaiting a Birth

One could say in this night sky can be seen the birth of stars, but who can tell in the stellar dust what's coming to light or leaving? The shape of that dim nebula is like pale shadows we celebrate in my daughter's womb: discernible fingers and hand, the faint umbilical reach toward connection.

I have thought these things during routine tasks—shaking a tablecloth in the night yard, washing dishes, sweeping. In the dailiness of the living, the mind leaps, say, at the glint of a glass, the sudsy water, or dust motes that join something past to this moment like the blind stitch that holds the hem.

Our grown daughter's voice reaches me from across a room, and I feel salt behind the eyes. Out of tones of a family gathering: a sudden perception of what a memory weighs. How I've kept a face not seen for months safe from time and strain, eyes clear and intense. How my son's jump from a tree years ago with an open umbrella of which I've just learned—occurs not then but now: I see his staunch curiosity poised on the branch, simultaneous with my smile at one more experiment survived beyond my knowing.

The sunmelt of days sears to these moments . . . but what rises in the heart is light.

—Dixie Partridge