

1-1-2008

In the Night Yard

Dixie L. Partridge

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq>

Recommended Citation

Partridge, Dixie L. (2008) "In the Night Yard," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 47 : Iss. 4 , Article 10.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol47/iss4/10>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

In the Night Yard

For J.

Roots rib the ground where dark grows out from trees, and I stumble among our own plantings: birch, filbert, cherry.
It's for silence . . . no, the form of silence . . . that I turned off house lamps and stepped out alone into shapes holding between them a present more tangible in an absence of light—a quiet that keeps poised, on the verge of spill, whatever moments mean.

No breeze flutes down limbs and trunks;
a scent of ripening grapes hangs faintly.
When I look at a slant,
I see paler night in the west sky,
like that aura reached as darkness begins to become light.
Time that rivers swiftly in our lit hours pools now, still and deepening;
the slowed self seems to float and sink at once . . .

and you say my name
with that upturn at the end,
not sure to expect I'm here.
Solitude moves instantly to something fuller . . . who I am linked to who you are, and though some say love is a kind of grief, it's only that absence is carved so exactly out of presence.

—Dixie L. Partridge