

10-1-2000

Haiku Poet

Marilyn Nelson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq>

 Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Nelson, Marilyn (2000) "Haiku Poet," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 39 : Iss. 4 , Article 15.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol39/iss4/15>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Haiku Poet

He said he wrote haiku like women sigh,
like windows darken gentle with the night.
He said he caught the rain of wings in flight—
he caught them quick and low and freed them high.
All night he whispered: Over the cool stones the stars pour their crystal tears; freezing the moonlight. The words rang out inside his bones and sang his blood; his pulse an orchestra.
No one could hear the song behind his eyes,
although his breathing swayed beneath its weight,
and then the breeze came lifting low and late through his lit window from the murmuring skies.
He said, soft: You know when death comes. A few poems stir like wind. They sing inside you.

—Marilyn Nelson

This poem tied for second place in the BYU Studies 1999 poetry contest.