

1-1-2009

Goodbye

Marilyn Bushman-Carlton

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq>

Recommended Citation

Bushman-Carlton, Marilyn (2009) "Goodbye," BYU Studies Quarterly: Vol. 48 : Iss. 1 , Article 5.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol48/iss1/5>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen\_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Goodbye

In my family, it is the word that says everything:
I love you; I want you to come back.

Only in her later years did Mother use the word proud. That sounded as frothy as love.

Once I didn't say Goodbye when my parents left for a long day and into the night for Salt Lake.

As usual, Mother had washed and ironed the temple clothes before layering them lightly into the two suitcases.

With my sisters and brother, I watched from the kitchen window for headlights to announce them.

When they didn't come, I knew I wouldn't forgive myself.
Salt Lake was as far away as we'd ever go then.

State Street was a long corridor of sirens.
Once I grew up, I didn't fret so much.

How many times had I practiced, unnecessarily, being an orphan? Then before she left finally after all the rehearsals that unhealthy year, when the family knew she would go and not come back,

we cast unnatural words around casually,
profusely, avoiding our own Goodbye,

fearing, perhaps, it would snap the coffin's latch.
We should have owned the word, released its syllables

from our tight tongues like genetic valentines,
the word both warmly complete, and open-ended.

—Marilyn Bushman-Carlton