

4-1-2019

Winter Rail Yard

Matthew Scott Stenson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq>

 Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Stenson, Matthew Scott (2019) "Winter Rail Yard," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 58 : Iss. 2 , Article 12.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol58/iss2/12>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Winter Rail Yard

I hear the coal train's organ note in the distance, remember the two pigeons
circling together and pecking the open ground between ties near the tracks.
They were smoke-purple birds, white-winged.
And even if a train by some surprise could pass over them violently vibrating their walls on either side, they would be safe in the center from every moving part,
not just the unearthly noise of torquing iron axle.
These birds probably have learned by now that after its spray-painted flanks clunk and clunk and rail away, it's all just the sound of commuters' engines again
and a slightly stronger morning sun.

—Matthew Scott Stenson

This poem won honorable mention in the 2018 Clinton F. Larson Poetry Contest sponsored by BYU Studies.