ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express appreciation to members of my committee and others who have offered suggestions and help. Dr. Phillip Flammer, as committee chairman, has given valuable assistance as well as Dr. Larry C. Porter and Dr. James B. Allen who gave early and constant encouragement for this project.

Thanks are due to Lyndon C. Cook, Dr. Clark Johnson and Dr. Milton Backman for sharing information from their collections of Missouri data.

I am grateful for my wife, Maren Barraclough, and our ten children who encouraged me to continue when the task extended into the fifth year.

FOREWORD

The extent of early Mormon land holdings in Missouri has never been discussed in detail. The reason is two-fold: it is virtually impossible to analyze Mormon land holding without knowing the names of the Mormons who lived in Missouri from 1831-1841. Concurrently, without proper identification of the Mormons, it has been impossible to know exactly where they settled. This study is based on an examination of over 3000 journals and other private and public documents which, in turn, revealed the names of over 8,000 Mormons who lived in Missouri during the ten years between 1831 and 1841. Also, research in the records of over thirty Missouri counties has revealed where the Mormons lived, particularly when they were landowners. (see App. "F" p. 88)

Analyzing the Mormon, non-Mormon population ratio in various counties and the land owned collectively among the Mormons provides a broader foundation for understanding the complex Missouri-Mormon problems of the late 1830's. As long as researchers worked with only a few hundred known Mormons who lived in Missouri, their studies were unavoidably restricted. This study shows that Mormons migrated well beyond the three to five counties usually discussed by historians. These counties are Jackson, Clay, Caldwell, Daviess and Carroll. Land deeds reveal that Mormons owned more than 82,000 acres in fourteen Missouri counties, or twenty-six (26) percent of the counties then organized. Mormons settled not only in the frontier of northwestern Missouri but also in north-eastern, southeastern, and central Missouri. This study also shows that the total Mormon population in Missouri during the period indicated was much greater than most writers have previously recognized. Indeed it is probable that, by late 1838, Mormons made up as much as ten percent of Missouri's population even as they were predicting that more "Saints" were on the way.

Several published sources spurred my interest in the problem of the Mormons in Missouri and particularly in the reasons for anti-Mormon hostility. In his A Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, Brigham H. Roberts observes that the reasons for their expulsion from the state included the slave issue, frontier lawless elements, cultural differences, Mormon clannishness, jealous protestant ministers, and social differences. In "Persecutions in Missouri", Richard Bushman reviews the same ideas but stresses the religious differences as the ultimate cause of Mormon rejection and expulsion. Warren A. Jennings, in his "The Expulsion of the Mormons from Jackson County, Missouri" also enumerates the reasons already listed and includes the Mormon's recurring emphasis on Zion and the Second Coming as a major cause of the expulsion. In his Ph.D. dissertation, "Zion is Fled, Expulsion of Mormons from Jackson County, Missouri", Jennings outlines several causes of conflict and emphasises the fear of Missourians that the rapidly growing Mormon population would take over their state politically. The same themes are dealt with in his article, "The City in the Garden: Social Conflict in Jackson County, Missouri." Locally published History of Jackson County, devotes nineteen pages to "Mormons in Jackson County", and makes several other references to the Mormons throughout it's 1006. The history seeks to justify the anti-Mormon activity by detailing Mormon lawlessness in northern Missouri counties, in Hancock County, Illinois, and in Utah.

Various county histories such as History of Cass County, History of Clay and Platte Counties, History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, Carroll County, Missouri, Ray County History and the History of Daviess and Gentry Counties seem to similarly quote or draw from the statements made in the History of Jackson County. Most of these describe the Mormons as a lawless and obnoxious threat to the people of Missouri. These histories were written in the late 1800's and early 1900's, when Mormonism had considerable bad press.
Leland Gentry's "A History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in Northwestern Missouri 1836-1839", follows rather closely the theme proposed in Robert's Comprehensive History, but adds considerable detail and includes the idea of fear of political control as a reason for the conflict.

It is the primary purpose of this thesis to demonstrate the extensive settlement and landhilding of the Mormon people in Missouri, and virtually no space is devoted to reviewing again the various reasons for persecution. The material presented here, however, is especially significant in supporting the view that Missourians feared the growing political power of the Mormons. That they had seemingly good reason to fear that power is clearly suggested by the extent of Mormon landhilding not only in the counties traditionally discussed by historians, but also in some of the surrounding areas. In addition, the vast numbers of Mormons in Missouri together with the realization that the Mormons were actively encouraging thousands more to come would naturally lead the Missourians to fear that eventually they would be overwhelmed not only economically but at the ballot box. The different social customs and stttitudes of the Mormons were, of course, significant reasons for persecution, but if the Mormons were percieved as simply a small group that posed no real threat to the political control of the old settlers, it is likely that they would have had much less difficulty. The realization, however, that the Mormons intended to make western Missouri their new Zion, and to make it the gathering place for thousands—even tens of thousands—undoubtedly contributed to the fear of Missourians that they were about to lose political control. The material presented here on Mormon population and the extent of Mormon landholding only adds the necessary documentation to the fact that the Mormons were, indeed, in a position to make the threat of a take-over seem real. It is hoped that the material will provide other scholars with a more accurate factual base as they continue to consider the perplexing question of the interaction between Missourians and Mormons. (see App. "D" p. 86)

Sources of information used in preparing this thesis include journals, newspapers, letters, family histories, diaries, and histories of all kinds which contained relevant biographical data. An effort has been made to distill the information into understandable charts and tables that better illustrate some of the situations described. The basic text of this thesis is short and concise, doing little more than providing a detailed view of the extent of Mormon settlement in specific areas of Missouri. Equally important, however, is a series of supporting appendicies which represent untold hours of work on the part of the author. These appendicies provide names and various comparisons that support the text and will, hopefully, provide a foundation for further research on the Mormons in Missouri.
CHAPTER I

MORMONS IN SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI

Jackson County

Five months after the organization of the Mormon Church on April 6, 1930, in Fayette, New York, Joseph Smith, its designated prophet and leader, spoke of a chosen city of Zion to be established "on the borders by the Lamanites." This, of course, meant western Missouri.¹ As directed, about sixty members of the Colesville Branch arrived in Jackson County, Missouri, an "infant" county named after the famous Andrew Jackson. They settled in Kaw Township late in June 1831 and began establishing a community.²

missionaries had arrived a few days before. On August 1, Sidney Rigdon dedicated the Land of Zion.\(^3\) That core of church leaders and missionaries then returned to Kirtland, Ohio leaving Bishop Edward Partridge as the presiding authority and land agent. Soon ten branches of the Church had been organized with "nearly a thousand Saints".\(^4\)

By the Spring of 1832, the Mormons were having serious difficulties with their new Jackson County neighbors. Ministers seemed to lead the "old settlers" in their assault, and by April of 1833 mobs of three hundred gathered in Independence to decide how to get the Mormons evicted.\(^5\) Things worsened as Mormons were beaten and tarred and feathered. Open gun battles erupted with killings on both sides. The Mormons finally ceased resistance on November 4, 1833 and began to flee in every direction.\(^6\) Mormon histories estimate the number of saints who were expelled at about 1200.\(^7\) Non-Mormon (see Appendices G, H, I, pgs. 167, 168, 169) sources numbered the saints at 1500 by April 1833. For every Mormon there were at least three "old settlers" comprising the populace of Jackson County. This writer estimates that it is quite probable that up to 1600 Mormons lived in Jackson County.

As the saints fled, some tried to cross the Missouri River into Clay County. Others, such as Solomon Hancock, went south of Independence. Hancock led a group of one hundred thirty-five people south but soon rejoined the Mormons in Clay County. Another group of one hundred ninety saints fled south and, according to Lyman Wight, built cabins within Jackson County's borders before the "old settlers" burned them out and they were forced to go to Clay County. Apparently many saints did not realize how far south the boundaries of Jackson County extended. The original boundary extended from the Missouri River on the north, to the Osage River on (see Appendix J, p. 170)

the south. This was approximately twenty-five miles wide and seventy-nine miles in length. The southern boundary was three miles below present day Rich Hill, Missouri. (see Appendix E, p. 87)

The original size of Jackson County is rarely considered by current historians of Mormon Missouri. This knowledge, however, is possibly significant since Joseph Smith announced on December 16, 1833 that he was told by the Lord to purchase "...all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County...." On September 14, 1835, twenty-one months after this revelation, Jackson County was reduced to one-third of its original size. (See figures 2 and 3) The portion that has been divided off from Jackson County was called Van Buren County in honor of Martin Van Buren, the eighth president of the United States. The southern part of Van Buren County was in turn renamed Bates County on January 29, 1841. The name Van Buren was rather short lived however. On July 1, 1849 it was changed to Cass County.\textsuperscript{17} According to early Jackson County resident Martin Rice, Esq., in 1833 "...there were, perhaps, seventy-five or a hundred families in what is now Cass County".\textsuperscript{18}

Such sparsely settled areas became areas of refuge for the saints. One party of six men and one hundred and fifty women wandered for several days without food before returning to the main body of saints. On November 23, 1833, twenty families were driven out of a small settlement about fifteen miles from Independence.\textsuperscript{19}

David Petagrew went south with six other men and eighty-four women and children to Van Buren (Cass) County. They took shelter in a cave during a severe snow storm but were discovered and driven to Clay County on November 18, 1833. Petagrew stated that he was warned by a company of men that he must leave immediately or they would spill his blood.\textsuperscript{20}

\textsuperscript{20}Andrew Jenson, \textit{Latter-Day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia}, (Salt Lake City: Andrew Jenson History Company, 1901), Vol. I, p. 618.
Lyman Leonard, Josiah Summer and Barnet Cole were also forced to flee from Van Buren County, (Lyman had two chairs broken to splinters upon him, before he got out of the county).\textsuperscript{21}

While all major histories have mentioned groups of saints who didn't immediately cross the Missouri River into Clay County, it is assumed that the saints quickly returned from their scattered locations in Lafayette and Van Buren Counties and rejoined their associates in Clay County. The "old settlers" in Jackson County invented the opprobrious term of "Jack Mormon" to apply to their Clay County neighbors who helped the Mormons.\textsuperscript{22} To the "old settlers" it now seemed certain that every scattered Mormon had been rounded up and driven from Jackson County.\textsuperscript{23}

Although existing histories conclude that all who went south soon returned, recent research has revealed that a group of fifteen families went south and stayed. One family stayed for over five years (with their neighbors knowing they were Mormons) before joining the main body of saints in Nauvoo. According to Sanford Porter, Sr. after they were forced out of their home in northern Jackson County "I with a few others traveled south and camped at the head of the Osage River. Then we traveled down the south fork for some distance. Then our little company of about fifteen families camped for the winter." 24

During the winter of 1833-34 this isolated group of saints built a few rude homes near the head of the Grand River. In the spring they moved further down the river, the Porters settling on a tributary of that stream, while Jonathan Sumner, Ira Smith and a Brother Pryor settled on the main stream (Grand River) about five miles from the Porter home. They lived at this place for four years before receiving a warranty deed from the U. S. Government. 25

The Porter homestead was 160 acres which comprised the northeast quarter of section #21, Everett Township (43N) and Range 32 West. 26 Thus the Porters chose a rich, beautiful valley in which to settle. It was well known to the Osage Indians for generations as Amarugia--meaning Pleasant Valley. Indians from several counties would travel this trail going to and from a place called Trading Post, Kansas.

Thousands who traveled this old trail wore deep ruts in the soil that are still visible today. The old trail ran next to the cabins that Sanford Porter built. This old homestead is now owned by John H. Davis and is called the "Spring Stream Farm". The stream that bordered the Porters homestead was known as Owens Creek. Presently there are several springs within Owens Creek that feed it before it empties into the South Grand River.27(see figure 5)

Two newly married couples, apparently married by Sanford Porter himself, probably went with the Porter group. Warren Porter and Amy Summer were married in Jackson County on December 6, 1833, followed by Enos Smith and Arilla Miller, who were married February 14, 1834. Since the marriages took place after the November 1833 expulsion it is safe to assume that the individuals concerned had fled south with the Porters.28

The Porters and others were able to exist somewhat peacefully in Jackson County for five and a half years after the main body of the saints were driven out. Their neighbors apparently knew that they were Mormons for Sanford's journal states that his group intended to move to northwestern Missouri with the main body of the Church in 1838, but their neighbors knowing this, would not buy their land, preferring to "wait and buy it dirt cheap". 29

Sanford's journal is quite detailed and yet records no harassment from the "old settlers" toward his family. His journal states that fifteen families went south of Independence as a group but he gives the names of only three families besides his own. How long these other families stayed and what kind of treatment they received from the Missouri "old timers" is not known. In any event, for nearly two years, several families stayed as part of the Porter group in Jackson County, since the county had not yet been reduced in size and the new boundary for Van Buren County established.

Bates County

In what is now Bates County, almost seventy-five miles south of Independence, a group of Mormons, exiled from northern Jackson County in 1833, continued to live in relative harmony for several years. This is contrary to the supposition by Mormon and non-Mormon historians (see Appendix I, p. 169)

29 Sanford Porter p. 17. Some of the non-Mormon neighbors of the Porters were Hugh Parsons, Manzey I Ashby, Alfred W. Delevan and John Whitaker.
that those Mormons who fled southward were driven back across the Missouri River into Clay County.

Three groups of Mormons are known to have settled in Bates County. The first is evidenced by the "Mormon Fork," a name given to a river. Some Mormons settled on this creek in East Boone Township.\(^3^0\) This location is just three miles south of a place where the Porter family lived in Cass County.

Aaron Wilds and his wife, who lived in Jackson County in the Whitmer settlement, represent the second group. According to early Mormon records they moved to Van Buren (Bates) County and died there.\(^3^1\) This agrees with the History of Bates County which mentions that a Mormon named Wilds settled in section 19 of Mt. Pleasant Township in 1838. This was four miles west of the present day town of Butler.\(^3^2\)

The third group of Mormons lived in the Lowe Oak and Pleasant Gap Townships. Mormons Daniel Francis and Abraham Towner moved to the Low Oak Township in 1835.\(^3^3\)

Francis sold his farm to Dr. William Regun in 1837. Towner and Francis then moved to Pleasant Gap Township with Francis' two sons-in-law, a Mr. Arthur, and a Mr. Constable. Francis died in this area before the Civil War and Towner moved to California in the 1850's. The Smith/Bullock list of Jackson County inhabitants lists Daniel Francis as an apostate of the Mormon faith.

It seems rather clear that Mormons who stayed in Bates County did not remain as Mormons.

Johnson County

At least ten Mormons lived for some time in Johnson County, which borders on the east of Jackson County. This county was part of Lafayette County until 1834. Although no Mormon land deeds have been identified in this county and no mob activity was evident, it is clear that James Goff who lived there in 1835, named a child after Elder Elisha Groves who was involved in extensive missionary activities in Missouri. The Goffs later moved to Caldwell County.

Lafayette County

This study identified twenty-six Mormons who lived in Lafayette County. After their expulsion from Jackson County, Mormons Jerome M. Benson, John Loveless and Horace Rawson lived in Lafayette County from 1834-1836. However, no Mormon land deeds were recorded in this county.

Lexington, Missouri became a place of refuge for at least one Mormon family in the fall of 1838 during the siege of Far West. Mary Elizabeth Rollins had lived in Independence in 1831 as an employee of Peter Whitmer's tailor business. She had done work for Lilburn W. Boggs and established a friendship which lasted several years. After marrying Adam Lightner in Clay County in 1836, the couple moved with the saints to Far West. It was during this trying time that Governor Lilburn Boggs' friendship for Lightner and Rollings paid off. The Governor notified Adam and Mary that he would like them to move to Lexington in Lafayette County and live there with his blessing and protection. They accordingly moved to Lexington and remained there through the expulsion difficulties. Later they joined the Saints in Nauvoo.

Approximately 1,600 Mormons lived in the larger Jackson County of 1831-1833. After they were forced out in 1833, at least eighty-one Mormons identified in this study stayed from several months to a few years in southwestern Missouri in the counties of Jackson, Cass, Bates, Van Buren, Lafayette and Saline. The total number of Mormons who stayed in southwestern Missouri after 1833 was not significantly large, however, in traditional Mormon histories it is specifically stated that none stayed. (see Appendix B, p. 84)
CHAPTER II

MORMONS IN NORTHWESTERN MISSOURI 1833-1836

The majority of the Mormons exiled from Jackson County in November 1833 went north across the Missouri River and tried to survive the winter in the more friendly Clay County. After weathering the winter, several dozen Mormon families left Clay County and rejoined the main body of the Saints in Ohio.

As additional Mormons moved to Clay County from the East in 1835 and 1836, the Mormon population swelled to over a thousand. A total of two hundred and eighty-eight families have been identified by this study as living in this county. One hundred of these families apparently owned land there. (see App. K, p. 171)

Clay County

Mormons had been invited to Clay County as an "interim place" to stay while they were petitioning the government for redress for Jackson County losses. Nevertheless they began to buy up considerable land in late 1835 and in 1836.41 Forty-four Mormon families had land deeded to them in Clay County totalling 3640 acres. Apparently these land purchases became a signal to the old Clay County residents that the Mormons were planning to stay.

Mob action by Clay County residents began as Mormons reached approximately fifteen percent of the county's population. It seems quite obvious that they feared an ever growing social and political impact from Mormons since they voted as a group. To resolve the situation negotiations brought about the formation of Caldwell and Daviess Counties in 1836. Most of the Mormons who had made Clay County their home for approximately three years now moved into Caldwell County in 1837-38. Several families however, stayed in Clay County until the saints left Missouri in the Spring of 1839. A few remained in Clay County until 1840.

Mormons such as Lyman O. Littlefield went back to Clay County after being driven out of Daviess County in November 1838. He found work as an apprentice printer to "Jack Mormon" Robert N. Kelley. Mr. Kelley was "friendly disposed towards our people", Lyman said, and Mrs. Harriett William Kelley, his wife, was a "talented, kind hearted and most estimable lady in whom the writers ever found a friend and sympathizer".

Clay County residents thus were friends to the Mormons until land purchases were started, and as the Mormon land was sold they became friendly again. The Littlefields moved to Daviess County and, after being forced from there, returned to Clay County in 1839. The Newel Knight family stayed in Clay County. The Allen Joseph Stout family moved to Clay County after being driven out of Clinton and Caldwell Counties and remained there until 1846.

Ray County

While the majority of the saints moved to Clay County in November 1833, within a few months some moved to Ray and Clinton Counties. On March 31, 1834, Nathan and Mary Jane Tinney bought a farm in northeastern Ray

They continued to live in this area for five years and never gathered with the saints in Caldwell County. Indeed, "Tinney's Grove" became a hiding place for the Mormons in the spring of 1839. Thirty-six poor families who were late in leaving Missouri found shelter in Tinney's Grove. Tinney also platted a town called Mt. Pleasant which was near Tinney's Grove. The Tinney's then sold their land and in 1840 moved to Illinois with the saints.

In 1835, Lyman Wight, John L. Butler and others bought land in Ray County near the Clay County line. A total of sixty Latter-Day Saint families chose to live in Ray County. Twenty-five families stated they owned farms in this county, however, recorded deeds were found for only eighteen families, covering 2134 acres plus eleven city lots in Mt. Pleasant.

Clinton County, which was established in 1833 lies to the north of Clay County. 54 Mormons began moving to this county as early as 1835 and, by 1838 more than one hundred saints lived there. A total of thirty-seven families owned 4080 acres of deeded land plus ten lots in the county seat of Plattsburg. 55

Several prominent Mormon families lived in this county including Hosea Stout, Phinehas Young, John J. Tanner, Squire Bozarth and Alfred Benson. At its peak, Mormon population was about ten percent of the county. 56

CHAPTER III

MORMONS IN NORTHWEST MISSOURI 1836-1839

While most of the Mormons living in northwestern Missouri during the years 1833-1836 lived in Clay County, a few moved into the sparsely inhabited area of northern Ray County, later to become Caldwell County. In December 1836 at the prompting of Alexander Doniphan, Ray County was divided into three counties. The two new counties, Daviess and Caldwell, were to be "Mormon" counties where the saints could "officially" gather.

More is known about Mormon involvement in these counties than all other counties of Missouri. (see Appendix A, p. 83)

Caldwell County

As noted earlier, the gathering to Caldwell County started as early as 1835, but was very slight until 1837. Heavy surges continued through 1838 and Mormons gathered rapidly from eastern and southern parts of the United States as well as Canada. When Kirtland, Ohio persecutions became intense and the leadership left the area in late 1837 and early 1838, Far West became the official church headquarters.

It has been estimated that the peak Mormon population in Caldwell County could have reached 10,000.58 From the writer's assessment, however, it could easily have been even higher. Mormon land purchases verifiable through recorded deeds in Caldwell County exceed 57,000 acres. Mormon leaders intended to buy up the entire county,59 which covered approximately 270,080 acres. All histories indicate that this county was almost exclusively Mormons during the 1835-1839 period, with perhaps 100 non-Mormons living in these 422 square miles of beautiful rolling hills.60

As persecutions increased in late 1838, almost all Mormon settlements were abandoned and the saints left the state or gathered to Far West in Caldwell County. The final showdown between Mormons and Missourians took place here under the extermination order of Governor Lilborn Boggs.

Most Mormons had moved from Caldwell County to 58Ray County, Missouri History, p. 255. Richard L. Anderson, a BYU professor, who wrote the chapter on Mormons in Missouri, suggested that the Mormon population of Caldwell County was 10,000.

Illinois by March 1839. However, several families remained in Missouri until 1841 when most of them moved to Nauvoo. The very rapid gathering to this county in numbers exceeded the apparent expectations of the Missourians. (see Appendix C, p. 85)

As an ever increasing number of Mormons gathered to northwestern Missouri in 1836-1838, church leaders saw the need to purchase land in counties surrounding Caldwell. As previously noted, land purchases increased significantly in 1838 in Clinton County.

Mormons moved into the several new counties including Daviess, Carroll, Livingston, Gentry, and Grundy. They began to buy as much land as they could afford.

Daviess County

The involvement of Mormons in Daviess County at Adam-ondi-Ahman is quite well known. Some accounts state that this settlement grew to a size of 3000 residents.\(^{61}\) This figure seems to be somewhat high, although large numbers of Canadian saints were directed to this location in late 1838. Lyman Wight seems to have been the first Mormon in this part of Daviess County. Colfax Township in the southwestern part of the county was the only place where deeded Mormon land can be verified.\textsuperscript{62} As early as February 1837, Philo Dibble, Elisha Groves, David Osborn and John L. Butler purchased land in this area near Marrowbone Creek. Land deeds totalled 2000 acres in Davie\'s county, although Mormons surveyed and expected to buy more. They were considering several thousand additional acres, including the entire Adam-ondi-Ahman area which would come up for sale in November 1838. Deeds of the Grand River area show the original owners to be (Rev.) Sahiel Woods, (of Carroll County), and other members of the mob who drove the saints out before the November land purchase date.\textsuperscript{63} In late 1838 Mormon population in Daviess County was possibly seventy-five percent of the county.

\textbf{Carroll County}

Up to five hundred people gathered at the town of DeWitt, Carroll County, Missouri and "bought up" the 136 lots making up the town and 640 acres outside the town.\textsuperscript{64} Mormons at this time totalled about thirty-one percent of the county population. The impact on other county residents is to be found in the intense unauthorized mob actions. Mormons stayed only three months in Carroll

County before being forced to yield, after which they were "herded" towards Far West. The Carroll County mob leaders were active in several Mormon mobbings in other counties.65

Gentry, Grundy and Livingston Counties

Few Mormons lived in Gentry and Grundy Counties. Gentry County was located about twenty miles northwest of Adam-ondi-Ahman and was not an established county until 1843. At least two Mormon families were known to have lived in this area.66 Grundy County, officially established in 1843, was still part of northern Livingston County when several Mormon families lived there in 1838-39. At least one family apostatized and stayed there, never gathering with the Mormons in Illinois or Utah.67

Several prominent Mormon families chose to live a few miles east of Adam-ondi-Ahman, in Livingston County. It is interesting to note that almost as much land was purchased by Mormons in this county as had been purchased in Jackson County five to seven years earlier. Land deeds indicate 3372 acres were owned by a total of twenty

CHAPTER IV

MORMONS IN EASTERN MISSOURI 1831-1836

Even before the Mormons were forced out of Jackson County in 1833, branches of the Church were established in several eastern Missouri counties. The earliest of these branches resulted from missionary activity in Monroe and Marion Counties in 1831-1832. Branches had been established in Marion County at Palmyra\textsuperscript{69} and on the Salt River in Monroe County by 1832.\textsuperscript{70} Numerous saints lived in Pike, St. Louis, Lewis and Chariton Counties.

Monroe County

The Salt River Branch of the Mormon Church in Monroe County is the only specific group of Mormons identified by Mormon histories as living in other than northwest Missouri during the 1831-1841 period. Mormons owned smaller percentages of land in these eastern counties than they did in northwestern Missouri. The mob activities and opposition against them was also less. In some of these counties they received rather friendly treatment. Land ownership in large proportions was never implemented by the Mormons who lived in eastern Missouri.

\textsuperscript{69}The Evening and Morning Star, April 1833, p. 11. Hereafter cited as Star.

The Allred settlement in Monroe County produced some of the earliest Missouri converts. William Taylor, who had moved from Kentucky to Monroe County in 1830, became perhaps the first convert to Mormonism in the state.71 Hyrum Smith and John Murdock came as missionaries to Monroe County in 1832 and baptized Reddick Newton Allred.72 Several other Allred families followed, including William H. and Elizabeth Allred, James and Elizabeth Allred, and John and Nancy Allred. Another prominent family of this area was the Ivie family. Several of the Ivie family relatives never joined the church and as late as 1854, the Ivies who went to Utah were still deeding land back to their Ivie kindred in Monroe County.73 The Ivies who joined the Mormons included James R. and Eliza Ivie, Thomas C. Ivie, and John A. and Anna Ivie. Several members of this branch stayed in this locality and never moved to join the main body of Mormons in northwest Missouri. However, most of them moved to Nauvoo though some stayed and went directly to the Salt Lake Valley from Monroe County.74

A few miles to the southwest of the Allred Branch, Mormons were proselyting in 1833 in Middle Grove, Missouri.75 Monroe County histories give no indication of hostilities against these early Mormons although considerable land was owned by them.76 Of the more than fifteen Mormon families who lived in Monroe County, only six of these families are noted in the deed books as owning land. Together however, their acreage totalled 2322 acres which is almost two-thirds of the total land owned by Mormons in Jackson County.77 In the journals and records of these early Mormons from Monroe County, there is no mention of them being persecuted or harassed by other county residents. From available records it seems probable that the Mormon population was between five to ten percent of this county.78 A few of the Mormon families from this county moved to Caldwell County, where, in 1838, they were driven out. They then

In June of 1834 three divisions of Zions Camp met at the Salt River Branch, rested a few days and enjoyed the hospitality of friends in this area. Ten members of this settlement went on to Clay County with Zions Camp as well as a few from Pike County.\textsuperscript{80}

\textbf{Pike County}

An early branch of the Church was set up at the town of Bowling Green, Pike County as early as the summer of 1834. Zions Camp, while based at the Salt River Branch in Monroe County, had sent Elders Seth Johnson and Almon W. Babbitt to the Bowling Green Branch to gather recruits in early July, 1834. They gathered a small company along with several horses and two wagons.\textsuperscript{81}

Thomas McBride, who was later killed at Hauns Mill in October, 1838, converted to Mormonism in 1831 and moved to Pike County in June 1834. He stayed in Bowling Green for two years, then moved to Ray County and from

While some Pike County saints never migrated to Church headquarters in northwestern Missouri, others, after being forced from Far West in the spring of 1839, again settled in Pike County, including thirty families who settled ten miles north of Louisa with the Isaac Russell group.\textsuperscript{84}

A total of forty-seven Mormon families lived in Pike County. Pike County had 6122 residents in the 1830 census and had increased to 10,646 ten years later.\textsuperscript{85} Less than two percent of this county were Mormons during these years. There is no record of any problems between the Mormons and non-Mormons in this county.\textsuperscript{86}

\textbf{Chariton County}

At least four Mormon families chose Chariton County as their residence during the 1830's. They stayed there throughout the Mormon-Missouri problems and then moved into Illinois in 1839.87

Ezekiel and Naomi Kellogg who lived about three miles northeast of Kayetsville were key Mormon figures in this county. Their 160 acre farm was located on one of the major roads the Mormons traveled between Illinois and Far West. Kirtland Camp stayed at Kellogg's place, watered their animals at his spring and partook of his hospitality before proceeding on to Caldwell County.88 Ezekiel had bought this farm on December 5, 1835 from William and Ann Smith (of St. Louis) for $125.00.89 His intention to stay is evidenced by the fact that he built a very large barn which is still standing. Its large handcut supporting timbers were held together with hand carved twelve inch wooden spikes. A large well, located next to this barn which is still used for watering livestock and the present house on the property has been remodeled over the log foundation of the old Kellogg homestead.90

It is quite probable that this old structure is the sole such survivor of the many built or owned by

Mormons in Missouri during this period. Lyman Wight's home at Adam-ondi-Ahman lasted into the twentieth century but only a few rocks from the home foundation now remain. The courthouses of the various counties dating to the 1830's have all been torn down and replaced, with the exception of the Jackson County Courthouse.91

Since most of the Mormon homes were burned or torn down before or soon after the Mormons left Missouri a barn is virtually all that remains of the Mormon era in Missouri. Still this Chariton County group of Mormons who lived one hundred twenty-five miles east of Far West, provided a much needed way station almost halfway between Quincy, Illinois and Caldwell County.

In the spring of 1839 the Kelloggs, along with David Petagrew, Peter Lassen and John H. Plumbs, sold their property in Chariton county and moved to Quincy (Adams County) Illinois.92

Lewis County

Lewis County, named for Meriwether Lewis, of Lewis & Clark fame, is located in extreme northeastern Missouri, only about thirty miles from Quincy and Nauvoo, Illinois.

LaGrange, a Mississippi River port town was the early home of a family who would later own more Missouri land than any other Mormon family of the period. The small town was only about twenty miles from Palmyra, Missouri where, through the efforts of George M. Hinkle a Mormon branch was established mid-May, 1833.93

A Mormon missionary named Elisha H. Groves, married James Parker and Eliza Williams on August 11, 1833 in Lewis County.94 Meanwhile, seeds were planted which would give a rich harvest when the Bozarths, a well known Lewis County family joined the Church.

John Bozarth came to the LaGrange area in 1819 when one could still see the ruins of a French trading post at the mouth of the Wyaconda River. In what may well have been the first known marriage in Lewis County, John Bozarth, Jr. and Abner Bozarth, brothers, married Amelia and Millicent Bowles, sisters, at Dabney Bowles place on March 15, 1829.95

In 1835 Elders Hinkle and Groves proselyted in the southwest part of Lewis County. They converted John Bozarth, Sr., John Bozarth, Jr., Abner Bozarth, Squire Bozarth and William Bates. Judge John G. Nunn allowed the Mormons to preach in his home and a Negro woman slave, Lite Hampton was baptized in the Fabius River near Nunn's Mill. The Bozarth's left Lewis County for Caldwell County in 1837.

Squire and Molly Bozarth's names began appearing on numerous land deeds in Clay, Clinton and Caldwell Counties as early as April 1836. Their land holdings in Clay County consisted of nine farms totalling 961 acres, or roughly one third of the know Clay County land owned by more than fourty-four Mormon families. The Bozarths seemed "heaven sent" to the exiled Mormons of Jackson County, most of whom were in an impoverished condition.

Although Lewis County, Missouri produced a great boon to early Mormonism, particularly through the Bozarths, the existance of Mormons in the county is virtually unknown to current day Mormons. It is true that Colonel George M. Hinkle became known as a traitor at Far West, but the wealth of one of his converted families may have provided much of the capital needed to assist Mormonism through a very trying period.

St. Louis Mormons

Numerous saints who desired to gather in 1838-1839 in Missouri got as far as St. Louis and stopped. Some ran out of money, others because of pregnancies and sickness decided to stay the winter of 1838-39. Many who had traveled that far, upon hearing of the mobbings in October and November in 1838, logically decided to wait to see what happened. They were among some of the most fortunate. No Mormon land purchases have been verifiable from 1838 to 1841 in St. Louis. It is known, however, that the St. Louis papers were outspoken in their disapproval of mob actions by their fellow citizens.

Marion County

Hyrum Smith owned eighty acres of land in Marion County which borders on the Mississippi River near Quincy, Illinois. It may never be known why he owned land so far distant from the center of Missouri Mormonism in Caldwell County.98

Approximately five years before Hyrum Smith purchased the farm, the saints received a letter from the saints of Palmyra.99 The next month on May 16, 1833 Elder George M. Hinkle and Elisha Groves wrote a letter telling of the recent baptism of eighteen new members in Palmyra.\footnote{Star, July 1833, II, p. 14.}

At first glance, one would wonder if perhaps the early Mormons named this town after historical Palmyra, New York, early home of their founder, Joseph Smith. However, the town of Palmyra was settled previous to 1830.\footnote{History of Marion County, Missouri, (St. Louis: E. F. Perkins, 1884), p. 43.} It is quite possible the early converts of this town enjoyed hearing of Joseph Smith's early home and the significant things that happened in another Palmyra.

Randolph County

Huntsville, located in Randolph County, was a friendly, rather peaceful town one hundred seventy-five miles east of Far West. Travel routes brought Mormons through this region and all available records from Huntsville area show a positive outlook toward the Mormons.\footnote{Lydia Knight History, p. 50.} Perhaps this is because the latter did not settle there in large numbers or stay long. Several Mormons stayed in Huntsville for a few days, weeks or months. However, no deeded property has been documented of these early Mormon residents. Some Mormons stayed the entire winter of 1838-39 however, and many Mormons, when leaving Missouri, were rescued from the cold and snow of winter by helpful Huntsville residents. One of the families to receive help was Joseph Smith, Sr. and Lucy Mack Smith. In this study, eight Mormon families are identified as living in this county.

CHAPTER V

TRENDS IN MORMON LAND PURCHASES

Land has traditionally been a symbol of wealth and social status. Most early Americans were unavoidably tied to the soil, for it was one of the most obvious and most readily available sources of independence and economic sustenance. Virtually everyone farmed to some extent in the 1830's and the acquisition of better and larger farms was a worthy objective of early Americans.

Non-Mormons had preceded the Mormons to Missouri by an average of nearly six years in the various counties. The eastern counties of Lewis, Monroe, Pike and others, where Mormons settled in the early 1830's, had been inhabited by white settlers for up to fifteen years. In western Missouri the counties of Ray, Jackson, and Clay had residents who had lived there since 1820.104

The permanence of the old pioneers was an important factor when Mormons moved in in large numbers and began buying up large amounts of land. Previous to the time Mormons moved to Missouri, land sales were rather gradual for several years and there was a seemingly conservative pattern of land ownership transfers. This trend, however, rapidly changed as Mormons arrived and began to purchase large amounts of land in northwestern Missouri. (see Appendix M, p. 173)

Mormons moving into Missouri consistently tried to buy the best farm land available. Moreover, they seriously intended to farm it and provide an economic base for themselves and others who would follow. For obvious reasons, the native Missourians disapproved of Mormon purchases almost from the start. In some cases, Mormon purchases kept them from buying land they would liked to have owned. In some cases, large Mormon land acquisitions drove up land prices in given areas. Moreover, Mormon land purchases rarely benefited Missourians, because most Mormons purchased their land from the U. S. Government. In the case of Carroll County, when the Mormons bought land it actually drove down the land value. Carroll County residents expressed concern that all land near Mormon holdings became relatively worthless.\textsuperscript{105} As stated by E. A. Lampkin, a citizen of Carroll County in September 1838:

Some of the citizens of Carroll have become so much alarmed as to sell their farms at less than half that they could have got for them one year ago, and a great many others intend leaving the county.\textsuperscript{106}

The size of farms purchased by the Mormons in Missouri varied from ten acres to more than a thousand. It was usually in direct proportion to how well-to-do the incoming Mormon family happened to be. With the exception of a few families who purchased city lots, over ninety-eight percent of all families who owned land in Missouri, owned at least a forty acre farm. Indeed this section of land was the most common Mormon farm in Missouri. This quarter of a quarter section was sold by the government for $50.00 or $1.25 per acre, the minimum acreage in these transactions with the government being forty acres.\textsuperscript{107}

In Jackson, Clay, Ray, Clinton, Livingston and other counties, the second and third sale of land usually cost between $1.25 and $1.50 per acre. In a few cases improvements were included in the resale of farms bought by the Mormons. However, in most cases, the land was unimproved. In these instances the land had to be cleared, wells dug and homes and barns built for the farm to be usable.

Common farm sizes were forty, eighty, or one hundred sixty acres. Less common purchases were made of farms as large as one half a section or three hundred twenty acres, or a full section which was six hundred forty acres. Some of the more wealthy Mormons had more than one hundred sixty acres, but only a few of these were located in a continuous plot of ground. In most cases a forty acre farm was located in one section, another forty to eighty acres were situated one or more miles from the persons original purchase where his home was built.

As noted previously, Mormons usually bought at least forty acres, however, several of the poorer saints purchased city lots. The first instance of this was the exiled saints of Jackson County who had taken up residence in Clay County. In 1836 they purchased twenty lots in Plattsburg, Clinton County, Missouri. The prices of these lots was between $10.00 to $42.00 each.\textsuperscript{108}

Nathan Tinney, a Mormon convert in Ray County, platted a town called Mt. Pleasant and sold some of the lots to fellow Mormons.\textsuperscript{109} As noted in early deeds

\textsuperscript{108}Clinton County Deed Record Book A, pp. 68, 92, 109.

\textsuperscript{109}Ray County Deed Record Books A, B, C.
another Ray County town, Hillsborough, was purchased by Mormons. A few Mormons also purchased lots in the small town of Utica near Chillicothe, Missouri in Livingston County. Lots were also sold in Caldwell at Far West as the town was platted. The largest purchase of town lots by the Mormons was in DeWitt, Missouri where one hundred thirty-six lots were purchased in the summer of 1838 by John Murdock and George M. Hinkle.

Large Land Owners

By totalling all the recorded land deeds held by Mormons in the various counties in Missouri, it appears that seven men owned more than one thousand acres apiece. All but one of these men held high leadership positions in the Church and used their positions to buy land for the Church to be redistributed to others. The following list shows the number of acres deeded to these men in their names:

Squire Bozarth, (a convert of Elders George M. Hinkle and Elisha H. Groves from Lewis County, Missouri in 1835) who held no recorded leadership in the Church, was a prominent Mormon land owner. Squires father, John, and his brothers Abner and John, Jr. also owned considerable land. Together the Bozarth family owned 3320 acres in Caldwell, Clinton and Clay counties.

A grandiose approach was decided upon in mid-1838 by Mormon leader Joseph Smith. A directive was given to buy up all the land adjoining the Grand River from Daviess County to its mouth at the Missouri River. In Daviess County this plan was carried out mostly north of Adam-on-di-Ahman. Some land may have been surveyed south of Gallatin but none is discernable through recorded land deeds in Daviess County. Grand River enters Livingston County as it leaves the southeast corner of Daviess County. Three properties were purchased by Mormons on the west side of the Grand River in this county. From Livingston County the Grand River forms the eastern boundary of Carroll County before emptying into the larger Missouri River. Phinehas Young bought one quarter section of land in the northeastern part of Carroll County and seems to be the only Mormon

113 History of the Church, III, p. 36.
purchase of land near the Grand River.115 This was near the place where the Grand River enters the Missouri River, the traditional site that W. W. Phelps saw Satan riding on the waters.116

It seems that the plan of buying up all the land on both sides of the Grand River never gathered much momentum before the Mormons were forced from Missouri. If all had gone according to plan, a total of over 500,000 acres would have been purchased at a cost of approximately $513,000. According to recorded deeds only one thousand one hundred and twenty acres were purchased.

The plan to make the Grand River navigable is questionable as to its feasibility. The river depth varies from a few inches to over forty feet. At flood times, the river collects massive amounts of trees and debris which often clog it in various places in its more than eighty miles to the Missouri. This ambitious project possibly could have worked with a great deal of labor and financial support.

Mormons tended to buy land with creeks and rivers running through the property or next to it. The critical need of mill sites for wheat and corn and other grains is recorded by many early Mormons since to be twenty to 115Carroll County Deed Record Book A.

116History of the Church, I, p. 203.
forty miles from a mill could be a critical problem.\textsuperscript{117}

Some of the more notable mill sites owned by Mormons were Haun's Mill, nine miles east of Far West; Fugates Mill one mile north of Far West; Whitney's Mill in the northeast corner of Caldwell County, and the Salem Mill ran by the Lyon brothers six miles southeast of Far West.\textsuperscript{118} The grinding needs of the Mormons in Missouri were first met by the established mills of the existing Missourians. As the Mormons began to build their own mill sites, however, the shift must have intensified some of the already strained relations between the Mormons and their neighbors. Concurrently, the tradition of Mormons only buying and accepting services from other Mormons became a real point of contention. Resolutions were passed in the Far West High Council, for example, that Mormons refuse to buy from businesses which sold alcoholic beverages, etc.\textsuperscript{119}

The exact ratio of Mormon versus non-Mormon land ownership in the various counties in Missouri may never be accurately determined. However, analyzing the original land purchases from the government by year, it is possible to make some fairly close estimates. Mormon owned land was less than one percent in many eastern counties such as Lewis, Marion, Pike, Chariton, and Randolph. Nearly ten percent of the land purchased by 1838 was "Mormon land" in counties such as Monroe, Jackson, Clinton, and Daviess. Other counties such as Carroll, Ray, Livingston and Clay in northwestern Missouri totaled less than ten percent. Caldwell County land deeds reveal that Mormons owned over ninety percent of the deeded land through the year 1838.

The sum total of all Mormon land in Missouri is unknown. Joseph Smith stated that more than 250,000 acres had been purchased by Mormons in Missouri.\textsuperscript{120} He was at a good vantage point to know how many acres had been purchased in Missouri, but his figure no doubt includes land that had been surveyed and claimed but for which the deeds had not been issued.

This rather exhaustive study of Mormon names and their relationship to land deeds from 1831 through 1841 (and beyond) reveals that a total of 82,433 acres of deeded land was owned by Mormons in Missouri. An estimated 2830 Mormon families lived in Missouri. Assuming all of them owned some land, the average number of acres would be 88.33 acres per family. However, only seven hundred and eighty-eight Mormon families were verified as owning Missouri land, or an average of three hundred and seventeen acres per family if Joseph Smith's 250,000 figure is used or one hundred and four acres per family if the 82,433 verified acres are used.

Mormons owned land in twenty-six percent of the inhabited and established counties in the state of Missouri. This ownership trend was still in its infancy when they were forced to leave the state. The stated Mormon intent was to "buy up the whole country". Obviously, this ambitious plan was never accomplished, but a rather impressive beginning was made by a few thousand early Mormons with limited means. To apply some perspective to the accomplishment, the total Mormons involved in Missouri land purchases were a few more than would make up a current stake in the LDS Church today. Moreover, few of these early pioneers possessed wealth beyond their daily needs. Clearly they intended a herculean task with their meager numbers and means.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

An effort has been made to outline the settlement and land holdings of Mormons in Missouri, by county, between 1831 and 1841. Between 1831 and 1838 the increase of the Mormon population was rapid and extensive. Some writers have suggested that the number of Mormons living in Jackson County in 1833 amounted to about thirty percent of the population. This study suggests that it was much higher, possibly as much as fifty-seven percent. In Clay County the Mormons increased to approximately fifteen percent of the population, while over thirty percent of the people in Carroll County were Mormons by the fall of 1838. Available data assembled in this study, demonstrates that Mormons in Daviess County increased to over seventy percent of the county population, while Caldwell County was almost totally Mormon.

This study suggests that the social and economic impact of rapid Mormon immigration in large numbers may have prompted the actions of Missourians. In northwest Missouri, where the total non-Mormon population was approximately 21,000, Mormons totalled approximately 15,000 or seventy-one percent of the total population of this region. Concurrently, over thirty settlements were begun by the Mormons in Missouri and many more were projected. Missourians worried about a Mormon takeover and justly so. Mormons settled in over sixty-eight percent of the inhabited areas of Missouri. Large land purchases signaled to all that they intended to stay.

JOSEPH SMITH INSTRUCTIONS FOR MOVE TO MISSOURI

a. D & C 28:9 (Sept. 1830) The City Zion is to be built on the borders of the Lamanites. Note Church is five months old.

b. D & C 38:18-20 (Jan. 2, 1831) A land of promise has been prepared, a land flowing with milk and honey for their inheritance and their children forever through eternity.

c. D & C 42:9, 62, 67 (Feb. 9, 1831) The land of promise was to be the city of the New Jerusalem.

d. D & C 45:64-65 (March 7, 1831) As the New Jerusalem is mentioned again, the phrase "western countries" is used to hint where the place is.

e. D & C 52:2-5, 56:12-13 (June 7, 1831) Missouri is to be the place of the next church conference and it is hinted that things might be told to those who go about their new Zion.

f. D & C 57:1-3 (July 1831) Missouri is the place for the city of Zion and saints are told to buy land.

g. D & C 58:52-53 (August 1, 1831) Purchase the whole region of the country of Missouri and gather, but not in haste.

h. D & C 63:24-29 (August 1831) Zion obtained by purchase or by blood.

i. D & C 101:16-17, 70-72 (December 16, 1833) Zion will not be moved because of Jackson County expulsion. Shall return. Purchase all the land in Jackson County and in the region round about.

LIST OF MORMONS IN MISSOURI 1831-1841

Note: This list of names is included in summary form, from over 3000 journals, histories and documents which this writer checked to form the basis of this study. In this writers collection, in most instances, several references are noted on each name documenting that these people did live in Missouri. The letter W indicates wife and the letter C denotes a child. Also note there is some duplication of names because of different spellings of the same name. The writer has not always been able to determine whether it is the same person or another individual by the same name, and has therefor listed them in order that no individuals be eliminated unnessarily. The number (1) or (2) indicates wife number one or number two.

MORMON LAND OWNERSHIP AS A FACTOR IN EVALUATING THE EXTENT OF MORMON
SETTLEMENTS AND INFLUENCE IN MISSOURI, 1831-1841

Wayne J. Lewis
Department of History
M.S. Degree, August 1981

ABSTRACT

The purpose of this thesis has been to demonstrate as clearly as possible the full extent of Mormon Land in Missouri during the years 1831-1841. An identification has been made of the names of several thousand of these early Mormons and will further show the scope of Mormonism during this period. This study will add detail to what previous writers have stated about this trying period for Mormonism.

As accurately as possible, the author has identified where the Mormon settlements were, through graphs and charts. It has been demonstrated that the Mormon population extended beyond the traditional areas they have historically "confined" to such as Jackson, Clay, Caldwell, Daviess and Carroll Counties. It is the desire of the writer to have the study used to further study of the Mormon decade in Missouri.
