ABSTRACT

OF

"TEXTUAL PARALLELS TO THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS AND BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS AS FOUND IN THE BIBLE"

THESIS

BY

ELLIS T. RASMUSSEN

The Problem

The problem of this thesis is: What textual relationship does the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints bear to the Bible, King James Version?

As a preliminary hypothesis, it has been assumed that there are phrases and clauses in the Doctrine and Covenants similar enough in construction and meaning to some of the phrases and clauses in the Bible to permit selection of samples from both that will parallel each other. Whether such parallel phrasing, when found, would appear to be a result of quoting, adapting, reiterating, renewing, alluding or simply coincidental construction constituted part of the problem. The following phases were accordingly chosen to be investigated:

(1) How many textual parallels per verse may be found for each section and if any variation in frequency appears, what factors seem to cause it? (2) To what extent are any such phrases or clauses repeatedly used? (3) How closely do the word groups compare to each other, granted that the best available parallels have been selected from the Bible text and the Doctrine and Covenants? (4) If the varieties of parallels can be classified, in what proportion does each variety appear? (5) Is there any appreciable difference in the number or kind of parallels found in the Book of Commandments as compared to those in the Doctrine and Covenants? (6) In which books of the Bible are the parallels found and with what frequency in each book? (7)
As a related problem, are there parallels in the Doctrine and Covenants to the Book of Mormon text in common with, or in addition to, those from the Bible? (8) What discernible purposes do the textual parallels serve in the Doctrine and Covenants?

Other related problems such as the reasons for the occurrence of Bible-like language in the Doctrine and Covenants, the relationship of the style of this book to that of Joseph Smith's private compositions, its relationship to religious writings and speech common to his times, etc. could not be undertaken at this time. All of the Doctrine and Covenants could not be examined because of the demands of time but the portion of it corresponding approximately to the Book of Commandments was completed.

That which has been done could be improved upon were it done again because of the difficulty involved in finding and selecting the closest possible parallels out of the long lists of phrases found in a complete concordance under every key word. The nature of this limitation will be further clarified in the next topic.

Procedure

The principal tools and sources used were a concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants, a concordance to the Bible, a copy of the King James Version of the Bible, a copy of the most recent edition of the Doctrine and Covenants and a reprinted copy of the Book of Commandments. Each of these books is more completely described in the body of the thesis report.

Practically every substantive and verb with their modifiers had to be sought out in the concordance of the Bible in the process of selecting possible parallels. As the collection proceeded and phrases or clauses appeared again for which parallels had already been found they were located and marked in a concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants and the location of the Biblical parallel to them recorded in the margin to facilitate repeated relocation of them. Thus for each word group studied either or both of the concordances had to be consulted. Each passage with its parallel was marked with code symbols for classification later as to type of parallelism and, when possible, as to particular function.

A similar procedure was followed for a sampling of Book of Mormon parallels in the first five sections of the Doctrine and Covenants and corresponding chapters of the Book of Commandments.
Related Studies

Various studies of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Commandments as well as studies of the prophetic books of the Bible as related to Latter-day Saint books and doctrines were consulted to discover what investigations have been made which bear upon the solution of this thesis problem. It was found that some writers who do not believe in any divine authenticity to the Doctrine and Covenants account the parallels to be evidence of cribbing, lack of originality, desire to deceive, or other nefarious motives on the part of the revelator. Those who have accepted the book as divinely inspired on the other hand see evidence in it of reiteration or elucidation of Biblical teachings, allusion to prophecy now fulfilled or repetition of predictions yet to be fulfilled, re-emphasis of divine commands, etc. None of the studies, however, present more than a few random samples of Biblical phrasing in the modern Scripture and these chosen usually to illustrate their hypothesis.

The present investigation is accordingly warranted so far as lack of work done in the field justifies it.

Historical and descriptive works relating the procedure whereby the printed revelations came into their present form in the Doctrine and Covenants were consulted for information as to whether or how the Bible was employed as they were written. No report was found indicating it to have been consulted.
The Analysis

When the data had been collected, appropriate aspects of the findings were tabulated with respect to each of the phases of the problem. General observations were drawn concerning each table, and the significance of them synthesized in the conclusions.

Some of the generalizations may be briefly stated here. For details and demonstrations of their basis it is quite necessary to turn to the tables and the generalizations following them.

The sections of the Doctrine and Covenants varied in number of parallels per verse. (The range was from 0.33 to 5.00; the median number 1.30 per verse.) Little evidence was found that the number was higher or lower according to the manner of receiving the revelations, but there is evidence that the type of subject matter treated effects the ratio. Certain doctrinal sections employ a high number of Biblical-type expressions whereas most of the instructional revelations parallel the Bible less frequently. This generalization does not hold true in every case, however.

Many expressions for which parallels were found were used more than once, but only three were repeated more than ten times. Of the three, only one came to be very common; it was used to attest the divinity of the information which followed it and was therefore repeated for an apparent purpose.

Most of the similar expressions found were only approximately parallel and very few verbatim groups of as many as six consecutive words or more were located. The nature and effect of the dissimilarities needs to be studied before any explanation or interpretation of the differences be attempted.

In general, the Book of Commandments has the same parallels as the Doctrine and Covenants except where verses and sections have been added. And these in turn have the same types and ratios of parallels as the other sections and verses. Very little has been deleted from the Book of Commandments in making the Doctrine and Covenants and nothing significant was noted with respect to parallels in such passages. In a few cases alterations made the text more like the Biblical wording but in an equal number of cases either no such effect or the opposite was accomplished.

The New Testament is a far richer source than the Old for expressions parallel to the Doctrine and Covenants. Most of the books of the whole Bible provide some, but many of the sources are found in a few of the books, as the tabulations and generalizations readily show.

Book of Mormon parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants are both frequent and in many cases exclusive, although in many cases they parallel the Bible wording also. In many instances the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants agree in wording where the Biblical source differs. Much more could be done in this phase.

Most of the parallels are unclassified parts of the new composition so far as their use is concerned. Of those classified as to use, by far the most frequent are prophecies reiterated, and general allusions. See Table 8.

Additional studies should be made of the particular contributions of the Doctrine and Covenants in repeating, clarifying, expanding, complementing the teachings given by the other Scriptures.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

For all cooperation and assistance received from many kind people in the course of making this study and report the writer is grateful.

For his interest in the study and his unfailing encouragement over the years as it has proceeded, his patience and cooperation when the demands of time pressed the writer hard, and for all suggestions, the writer is indebted to Dr. Sidney B. Sperry.

To Dr. Hugh Nibley, likewise he is grateful for cooperation and encouragement.

The writer's colleagues and associates in the Division of Religion have each given aid in both direct and indirect ways.

To the stenographers and their families who adjusted schedules to help him meet certain demands, he wishes to express gratitude. Mrs. Norma Stevens who took the job over and lent her ability and skill to refining and properly presenting the material; Mrs. Norma Boswell and Mrs. Enid Petersen who accepted portions and did them in time of need; and Mrs. Ardith Pearson who voluntarily did part—all bearing with the problems and aberrations of the writer's copy, have done him a service.

The writer's family have suffered some neglect and have cooperated in helping him find time enough, and his wife has relieved him of many details of classifying and arranging.

Others of his associates in the Ward have been most kind.

The Problem

Definition of the Problem

The problem of this thesis is:-- What textual relationship does the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints bear to the Old Testament and New Testament, King James Version? The solution of the problem entails seeking out phrases and clauses in the Bible similar in wording (vocabulary and syntax) and in meaning (denotations, connotations) to phrases and clauses in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Specific phases of the problem:-- (1) How many textual parallels per verse may be found for each section of the Doctrine and Covenants? (a) Is there any apparent difference in the ratio of their occurrence according to the type of revelation involved? (b) Is there any indication as to what type of subject matter occasions the highest ratio of parallels? (2) To what extent are any such phrases or clauses used repeatedly? (3) How closely do expressions in the texts studied parallel each other as to similarity in (a) wording and meaning; (b) wording, while differing somewhat in meaning; (c) meaning, while differing somewhat in wording; (d) wording only; (e) context
only? (4) What proportion of each type of parallel is found in each section of the Doctrine and Covenants? (5) Is there any appreciable difference in the number or kind of parallels found in the Book of Commandments as compared to those in the Doctrine and Covenants? (6) In which books of the Bible are the parallels found and in what ratio for each book? (7) As a related problem, are there parallels in the Doctrine and Covenants to the Book of Mormon in common with, or in addition to, those from the Bible? (8) What discernible purposes do the textual parallels serve in the Doctrine and Covenants in (a) reiterating prophecies, (b) emphasizing or further elucidating upon Biblical teachings, (c) showing fulfillment of Biblical prophecies, (d) in expressing new ideas by phrases adapted from or evidently similar to Biblical phrases of different context?

Delimitations of the problem: Because of limitations of the researcher and of research tools, which will be discussed later, this thesis does not present all of the textual parallels; additional can no doubt be found by additional studies and by other researchers. It will not be attempted in this study to determine why the latter day prophet used word combinations in common with those used in the English rendition of ancient prophets' works, except as some discernible purposes of the parallels may be noted in answer to Problem #7 above. No 1This phase of the problem, thoroughly solved, would present a detailed cross reference of comparable doctrines and history beyond the scope of this thesis. Samples only will be shown of these strictly contextual parallels.

tempt will be made to compare the language of the Doctrine and Covenants with that of personal writings of the prophet Joseph Smith, nor with writings of his contemporaries to find whether similar parallels are used therein. No investigation will be undertaken of the reasons for or the nature or extent of the Prophet's familiarity with Biblical expressions. Reasons of these delimitations will be given in this chapter, under the minor heading, Procedure.

Significance of the problem:-- The chief significance of the solution of this problem will lie in its contribution to comprehensibility of the Scriptures, passages in either of which may be clarified through their use and meaning in the other. Of secondary significance may be whatever indication it affords of the nature and process of reception of information by means of revelation. The possibilities of such contributions will be evaluated in Chapter IV in this thesis.

Definition of Terms

Terms Used in the Thesis Title

Textual parallel is defined to designate a phrase or clause from the Doctrine and Covenants similar in vocabulary and syntax to a comparable phrase or clause in the Bible.
Varying degrees of similarity will be noted by the following code:

SWCv:-- Same words, used in same arrangement, connoting same general meaning in both sources.

SWC:-- Same as above, except that one or two words may have been changed or rearranged.

SC,W:-- Same as above except that several words have been changed or rearranged.

SC,WU:-- Same as above except that only one or two words have been similarly used.

SW,C:-- Similar wording adapted to somewhat different context.

SC:-- Same general meaning but no similarity in wording.

SW:-- Similar wording but different context.

The manner or purpose in using the parallel is classified and marked by means of the following additional symbols, in lower-case letters:

a:-- Allusion; such passages apparently refer to a situation or statement found elsewhere.

ha:-- Identifies an obvious historical situation to which the phrase or clause refers.

r:-- Reiteration.

pr:-- Prophesy reiterated.

pf:-- Prophesy fulfilled.

e:-- Elucidation.

v:-- Verbatim parallel.

ad:-- Adaptation of given wording to a different context.

frp:-- Frequently repeated group of words.

In many cases no identification of the passage as to use has been made where expressions have apparently been borrowed, or composed coincidentally in parallel, simply because they express what the revelator needs to say.

Two factors will render it impossible to make these symbols entirely accurate. (1) The mind of the researcher is the tool which necessarily decides upon similarity or dissimilarity in meaning; other minds may well vary in opinion as to this quality of parallelism. (2) The length of the phrases and clauses varies from two or three words to many words and the degree of similarity or dissimilarity in wording has not been determined upon a strictly arithmetical ratio, as the purposes served seem to the researcher not to warrant the technical labor of counting and computing exact coefficients of correlation based upon percentages of words that are the same and that are different in each set of parallels. Five quite distinct classes of parallels will be used in final computations: (1) verbatim groups, (2) slightly changed groups, (3) considerably changed groups, (4) parallels in wording only, (5) parallels in meaning only. These will be more specifically described in the actual tabulation in Chapter IV.

The Doctrine and Covenants referred to in the title and in the problem is the Scripture by that title as published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in 1921 and reprinted since then. The revelator responsible for most of it is Joseph Smith (viz. Sections 1-133). All of the sections considered in this thesis are from him.

Differences between this edition and earlier editions of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Commandments have been studied by another researcher whose work is cited in Chapter II of this thesis.

The Book of Commandments used in the solution of problem #5 above is a copy of that book as "reprinted verbatim by Charles F. Putnam and Daniel Macgregor." ¹

Terms Used in Statement of the Problem

Textual relationship.-- The textual relationship between the Scriptures considered is constituted in the occurrence of textual parallels defined above. The varying degree of relationship between various portions of these Scriptures will be noted, and will be expressed by indication of the number of parallels per verse in each section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and the most frequent location of them in the Bible for each section. Some observation will also be possible as to what subjects treated in common by the Bible and a given portion of the Doctrine and Covenants call forth the greatest number of textual parallels.

The Old Testament and New Testament, King James Version.-- These terms do not require special definition.

¹This claim for the authenticity of the volume is printed on the back of the title page. Its validity has been investigated by John William Fitzgerald in a thesis cited in Chapter II of this present study. The original Book of Commandments was printed in Jackson County, Missouri, by W. W. Phelps & Company in 1833. The sixty four sections of the Doctrine and Covenants studied in this thesis cover the sixty five chapters of the Book of Commandments.
Procedure

Tools of Research

Scriptures used.-- The versions and editions of the Scriptures used have already been described in the section of this Chapter which defined terms used in the title and problem.

Concordances.-- The Winston Cruden's Complete Concordance\(^1\) was chosen as the most preferable tool for location of passages in the Bible because of the nature of the organization of this concordance, key words being indexed in it not only singly, but in phrase-combinations in which they commonly occur. Thus the researcher is frequently able to find a desired phrase without scanning all of the phrases in which the word occurs, but only those corresponding to the one particularly sought. It indexes all of the words of sufficient importance so as to make it possible to find any desired phrase for which one or more key words are known or supposed to exist.

A Concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants\(^2\) was used to discover repeated uses of any phrase or group of words for which a parallel already has been found.

How the Tools Were Used

Working copy.-- A typewritten copy of the first sixty-

\(^1\)Alexander Cruden, Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Old and New Testaments (Chicago: The John C. Winston Co. 1930)

\(^2\)John V. Bluth, Concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants (Salt Lake City: The Deseret Book Co., 1945)
four sections of the Doctrine and Covenants was made, with corresponding material from the Book of Commandments copied in parallel lines to Doctrine and Covenants text for ready word-for-word comparison of these two books. This is a more elaborate and expensive tool than really necessary, but the original intent of the researcher was to present all data in this form, with other textual parallels being added as third and fourth lines or more as the case might be. This presentation proved to be too cumbersome and voluminous. The parallel-line copy of the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Commandments had been made with ample spaces between each pair of lines so that it served well as a working copy for recording textual parallels from the Bible.

Discovering parallels.-- As "key words" to phrases and clauses in the Doctrine and Covenants practically every substantive with its modifiers and every verb with its modifiers were sought out in the concordance of the Bible. An average of one hundred words were checked in every thirty verses of the Doctrine and Covenants. For the total 1503 verses in the 64 sections examined, approximately 5,000 key words were sought out either in the Bible concordance or the Doctrine and Covenants Concordance, or both. Unless the researcher was quite sure a given combination of words had never been found previously, he examined the Doctrine and Covenants Concordance first for each combination of words; failing to find that a Biblical parallel had already been located, he looked for it in the Bible concordance. This activity was the most time-consuming work of the thesis; second to it was the transcription of the word combinations with their parallels and reference symbols to a form for presentation. Each passage with its parallel was marked with an appropriate code symbol (see the list under "Definition of Terms") for classification purposes.

In cases where numerous locations were found for a commonly used or frequently repeated phrase or clause in the Bible, a typical one was chosen, usually the earliest location where it appeared. In some such cases the number of times such a word combination was indexed was counted and recorded. Likewise the number of times such word combinations were repeatedly used in the Doctrine and Covenants were counted in cases of frequently used groups.

Manner of Presenting the Data

The parallels and their locations are presented in a long list following the chapter and verse sequence of the Doctrine and Covenants. At the head of each page a symbol will identify the section of the Doctrine and Covenants and the chapter of the Book of Commandments treated on the given page. Thus, D 1, B 1 means the page shows passages taken from section one and chapter one of those books, respectively. In the left-hand column of each page the location of each passage is given. Thus, on a page headed D 3 a passage marked D.9 (4) is quoted from Doctrine and Covenants 3:9 and is the same in Book of Commandments 4:4. The location of the parallel passage is listed directly under the verse identification. Thus, I Cor.
10:12 SC indicates that material similar in context may there be found. Furthermore, "See D. 7:1", followed by "from I Cor. 5:5" means the passage has been located and recorded before in Doctrine and Covenants section seven, verse one, as found in I Cor. 5:5. References to the Book of Mormon are enclosed in parentheses for more ready identification. Other mechanical details of the manner of presentation will be obvious.

The findings will be presented in a series of tables, with discussion in Chapter IV. One or more tables will be constructed to show an answer to each particularized question under the general problem.

Other sources of parallels.-- Whereas it would be of interest and value perhaps to one studying the contributions of latter day prophecy to see what is new compared to what is old in the Doctrine and Covenants by searching out all discernible antecedent sources whatsoever, such a study is beyond the scope of this thesis because of the demands of time. It was thought to be a matter of sufficient value however, that a sampling of parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants from the Book of Mormon was undertaken for the first five sections. References to this source are accordingly included along with Biblical references. These are enclosed in parentheses for more convenient identification. Significance of this phase of the study will be discussed in Chapter IV.

Exhaustion of time and the volume of the work as far as completed obliged the present researcher to stop with Doctrine and Covenants section 64, corresponding to the 65th and last chapter of the Book of Commandments. Further research that might well be undertaken will be suggested in Chapter IV of this thesis.

My limitations: It cannot be assumed that the most suitable parallel for each passage was found, as more meticulous and time-consuming examination of the long lists of various combinations in which key words often appear would be required than time permitted the researcher during the more than two years he has been engaged, somewhat intermittently, on phases of this research. By the same token, for many phrases and clauses in the Doctrine and Covenants for which suitable parallels might be found, none have as yet been found, though they have been somewhat diligently sought.

In an effort to compensate for the difficulty of locating a desired word group in the long lists containing more common substantives and verbs, attempts were made to locate such also by means of seeking out the modifiers in the concordance.

This is a preliminary study, a new venture. Its accomplishments could be much altered and improved by further work.
CHAPTER II

THE RELATED LITERATURE

Identification of "Related" Literature

Related in Subject Matter

Although there is not extant any complete study analyzing or describing the textual relationships between the Scriptures considered in this thesis, students and critics of the Doctrine and Covenants have mentioned it. Some generalizations have been made as to the nature and extent of the influence of the Bible on the expression of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. Some writers have set down their opinions as to how the "revelations" were "composed". As mentioned in the topic on "Significance of the Problem" in Chapter I above, the findings of this thesis study may contribute toward the corroboration—or the contradiction—of these observations.

More directly related are the studies which have been made of the influence exerted by parts of the Bible upon Latter-Day Saint Doctrines and practices; such studies as observe the reiteration, the elucidation, or the fulfillment of prophecies and promises of ancient times brought to fruition in the latter days touch upon relationships which in this study will be reflected in parallels in text. None of these known to the researcher present the data, however, as he has done.

Literature Relating to the Origins of the Revelations

The revelator himself, Joseph Smith, as well as some of his associates and contemporaries, has left descriptions of the process of receiving and transcribing the revelations. From these should come some inferences and evidences as to the nature and origins of the textual parallels.

Related in Method of Investigation

Some studies have been made of the bearing of ancient Scriptures upon modern Scripture other than the Doctrine and Covenants. These are related to this study in method and intent to some degree.

Bearing of the Related Literature upon the Present Problem

Literature Critical of the Doctrine and Covenants

One investigation of "revelation in Mormonism"\(^1\) of relatively recent origin, and somewhat representative of many others among the more than fifteen hundred\(^2\) critics and expositors dealing variously with the subject, comments thus on the texts under consideration:

\(^1\)George Bartholomew Arbaugh, Revelation in Mormonism (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1932)

\(^2\)Over fifteen hundred such works are extant.

Arbaugh, op. cit., pp. 235-241 lists a bibliography of works relating specifically to Mormon revelation, including: Mormon Scriptures (of all "factions") 42; General Literature 192; Periodicals 14.
The first revelations indicate that oracular revelation was in an experimental stage. They lean heavily on the N. T. and are crudely repetitious. Thus 3 (U4), which encourages Smith's father and others to thrust the sickle into the harvest, borrows from Isa. 29:14, John 4:35, Rev. 14:15, I Cor. 13:13, and Matt. 7:7, and is inserted bodily in 5, 10, 11, and 12 (U 6, 11, 12, 14). Sections 13 and 14 (U 15, 16) are identical, except addressed to different men. Like other prophets, Smith had difficulty in making his oracles appear to be divine revelations, and like them put into God's mouth sayings which are acknowledged to be His, biblical passages. Gradually his oracles began to show a style of their own although the influence of the King James Bible remained dominant.2

The same author observes the whole nature and purpose of modern pseudo-Biblical literature to be a matter of expediency—and deception. In connection with his discussion of the Book of Mormon, to which he refers as a "new Bible", he remarks:

Having used a new Bible to justify ecclesiastical revolution, further innovations required more Bibles. But in writing new Bibles indefinitely there were difficulties, not the least of which was finding satisfactory matter with which to pad them. Thus Smith decided to write several books of which nothing more than fragments ever materialized. . . . . Revising the Bible to suit one's taste was in some respects easier than writing new scriptures; so this was resorted to. . . . .

In fact, it was found necessary from the beginning to supplement the holy books with immediate revelations. The "revelations" associated with bringing forth the Book of Mormon served as models for a long series which were printed as the Book of Commandments, and later with alterations and additions as the Doctrine and Covenants.3

Commenting further on the inclusion of the simulated divine words in Joseph Smith's revelations: "As time went on

1Arbaugh, op. cit., p. 88, footnote 15 explains that "'U' refers to D. C. of Utah church, '.D. C.' to that of Reorganized church."

3Ibid., pp. 3,4.
fewer were written. Most of the doctrines were already revealed, and in giving commands it was less dangerous for Smith to speak than for God to do so." Within the legitimate province of the present study will be observation of the "discernible purposes"\(^1\) served by the Biblical textual parallels found in the revelations through Joseph Smith to be considered.

Another critic\(^2\) of the Doctrine and Covenants finds it impossible to conclude otherwise than "that Mormon inspiration is the common, everyday operations of the human mind, some good, some bad, some worse, . . . ." and finds particular evidence therefor in the changes made in the Book of Commandments text as published in the Doctrine and Covenants. Whether there may be any corroboration or refutation of his position in the manner the parallels to Biblical texts are handled in such changes remains also within the field of investigation of this thesis.\(^1\)

Literature Attesting the Genuineness and Authenticity of the Revelations

Since this class of related literature will also have only slight bearing on the problem of identification and classification of textual parallels, one representative work is here offered as typical of the many that have been written. If the revelations be accepted as they are by these writers, and by faithful Latter Day Saints in general, there will be seen to be divine purpose in the parallels alluding to former prophecies, reiterating promises, and pointing out fulfillments accomplished or yet to be.

The attitude of those so accepting the Doctrine and Covenants is well exemplified by a recent treatise, and the sources cited within the same:

These divine communications are not extraneous, unrelated, unwelcome messages that were forced upon him. They all came as a direct and positive need for specific instruction to meet a special problem at that time of crisis. They are answers to prayers which were uttered at that critical time in order to gain divine assistance in solving a particular problem.

The Doctrine and Covenants is the sacred book of the Latter-day Saints. Elder Osborne J. F. Widtsoe has wisely expressed it in these words:

"It meets conditions, not of two thousand years or more before Christ, but of the present day. It gives specific directions for the establishing and maintaining of the Church of Christ, not among an oriental people in a primitive age, but among an active people in a progressive age. The living oracle of God is of far more value than the breathless letter."

As the Doctrine and Covenants has gone forth to the world in many editions and languages, it has convinced many readers that it contains the word of God. When the book was first published it contained a "Testimony of the Twelve Apostles", bearing witness that the revelations were given by divine inspiration." It contained this paragraph which thousands of readers have found to be true:

"We therefore, feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of the earth, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men and are verily true."

In this spirit the book has gone forth to the world, and in this spirit it has been received.¹

Literature Describing How the Revelations Were Received

Any reports by the revelator himself or by those associated with him in the reception of revelation should also claim attention of an investigator of the Biblical text materials in the Doctrine and Covenants even though it is beyond the province of the present investigation to attempt more than incidental treatment of the reasons for their inclusion. Knowledge of the manner in which the revelations were received and written will aid somewhat in identification of some of the parallels as quotations, historical allusions, general allusions, repetitions, etc. Such aid will not be conclusive, admittedly.

Aside from this purpose, it seems appropriate in the preliminaries of a study of a portion of the Doctrine and Covenants to include some information concerning the history and process of its composition.

A historical note by Joseph Smith relating to the circumstances of the reception of Section 50 of the Doctrine and Covenants is especially enlightening: "In May, a number of Elders being present, and not understanding the different spirits abroad in the earth, I inquired and received from the

One of the Elders present on the occasion just mentioned was Parley P. Pratt. He describes the circumstances in a manner such that we learn several salient facts about the process of receiving revelation. Referring to a particular problem that had arisen because of "some very strange spiritual operations," he says,

All these things were new and strange to me, and had originated in the Church during our absence, and previous to the arrival of President Joseph Smith from New York. Feeling our weakness and inexperience, and lest we should err in judgment concerning these spiritual phenomena, myself, John Murdock, and several other Elders, went to Joseph Smith and asked him to inquire of the Lord concerning these spirits or manifestations. After we had joined in prayer in his translating room, he dictated in our presence the following revelation.\(^2\)

He further contributes striking information as to how this and other revelations were given through the Prophet.

Each sentence was uttered slowly and very distinctly and with a pause between each, sufficiently long for it to be recorded by an ordinary writer in long hand. This was the manner in which all his written revelations were dictated and written. There was never any hesitation, reviewing, or reading back, in order to keep the run of the subject; neither did any of these communications undergo revisions, interlinings or corrections. As he dictated them so they stood, so far as I have witnessed; and I was present to witness the dictation of several communications of several pages each.\(^2\)

See also comment made by the Prophet in the historical setting of almost any of the revelations published. The cases of sections 14, 15, 16, 21 were thus given in the presence of groups who had come to inquire. Ibid., pp. 49, 78.

Bearing also upon the problem of changes in the revelations, mentioned in a previous topic in this thesis, B. H. Roberts adds the following comment on what was just quoted from Elder Pratt.

This statement of Elder Pratt's is true in a general way, and valuable as a description of the manner in which revelations were dictated by the Prophet; and needs modifying only to the extent of saying that some of the early revelations first published in the "Book of Commandments" in 1833, were revised by the Prophet himself in the way of correcting errors made by the scribes and publishers; and some additional clauses were inserted to throw increased light upon the subjects treated in the revelations, and paragraphs added, to make the principles or instructions apply to officers not in the Church at the time some of the earlier revelations were given. The addition of verses 65, 66 and 67 in sec. xx of the Doctrine and Covenants, is an example.\(^1\)

The observation of Orson Pratt on the agents and agencies, human and divine involved in the receiving of revelations cannot be omitted.

I was present when Joseph received revelations. I particularly remember the one on the United Order. There was no great noise or physical manifestation. Joseph was as calm as the morning sun. But I noticed a change in his countenance that I had never noticed before, when a revelation was given to him. His face was exceedingly white, and seemed to shine.

I had been present many times when the Prophet was revising the New Testament, and wondered why he did not use the Urim and Thummim, as in translating the Book of Mormon. While this thought passed through my mind, Joseph, as if he had read my thoughts, looked up and explained that the Lord gave him the Urim and Thummim when he was inexperienced in the Spirit of inspiration. But now that he had advanced so far as to understand the operations of that Spirit, he did not need the assistance of that instrument.\(^2\)

It is evident from these accounts that between the time the problem was presented and the answer given, Joseph had no time to look up and quote or cite Scriptural passages, nor did he pretend to do so. He spoke. It appears that what he said arose either from his own mind, memory, or the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Our present study will show to some extent what sort of Scriptural parallels he used and how he used them. As to whether the source of them was human agency or divine, there is a source whereby they who qualify themselves and want to know, may "know the truth of all things".¹

Joseph Smith himself describes how one feels under the influence of the spirit of revelation and in so doing gives further light on the problem of how the Doctrine and Covenants came into being. "When you feel pure intelligence flowing into you, it may give you sudden strokes of ideas, . . . . presented unto your minds by the Spirit of God. . . . ." As to how these ideas came to be expressed, the Doctrine and Covenants itself gives the information that they are, quoting the Lord, " . . . . words of mine from the mouth of my servant, . . . ."² It is said that they are " . . . . given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding."³ Sidney Rigdon on occasion ¹Moroni 10:5; cf. Jn. 16:13; I Cor. 2:11-14. Each man must seek to know of the things of God for himself; such "knowledge" cannot be presented by a thesis, though sources of it may be pointed out. That is all we strive here to do.

²Doctrine and Covenants 50:36 (Same revelation as P. P. Pratt described as quoted on p. 18 supra.)

was given the challenge to "prove" the words as they came from the Prophet: "... behold, it shall be given unto him to prophesy; and thou shalt preach my gospel and call on the holy prophets to prove his words, as they shall be given him."¹ Again, he himself was given the privilege of expressing the will of God: "And I give unto my servant Sidney Rigdon a commandment, that he shall write a description of the land of Zion, and a statement of the will of God, as it shall be made known by the Spirit unto him."² The twelve Apostles were told that the origin and authority of the words of the revelation were divine, given and attested by the Spirit and valid as if spoken audibly by His voice.³ The Lord speaks by the Spirit to the revelator, and through the revelator to the reader.⁴

That the language of the revelator when recording revelation received by the Spirit in this manner is his own, and may have imperfections in it seems plausible,⁵ and the second Prophet, seer, and Revelator to the Church, Brigham Young, tells us that there are weaknesses, gives the reason for their being there, explains why revelations are given in the language and wording familiar and understandable, and infers there are valid grounds for correcting revelations or improving them to express more nearly what the Author intended to convey.⁶

The presence of quoted, partly quoted, or otherwise adapted scriptural passages in the written revelations is not surprising, then. To express ideas whether concocted, conceived or inspired one uses the words, idioms and phrases he commands. This Joseph may have done.

How the Revelations Came to be Published in Their Present Form

The nature of the revision of the early written revelations which appeared in the Evening and Morning Star and in the Book of Commandments and which were altered, augmented or deleted in the preparation of the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants has been studied as a thesis problem. As previously mentioned, the present study will observe any Biblical parallels in these changed passages, and any significance seeming to attach thereto will be noted in Chapter IV. For preliminary purposes here, suffice it to say a "General assembly of the Church of Latter-day Saints was held at Kirtland on the 17th of August, 1835, to take into consideration the labors of a committee appointed by a general assembly of the Church on the 24th of September, 1834, for the purpose of arranging the items of the doctrine of Jesus Christ for the government of the Church." These items were "to be taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which have been given to the Church up to this date, or that shall be given until such arrangements are made. ¹ They did as appointed and authorized to do, Joseph Smith being one of them. It will be interesting to see whether such items from the Bible appear in places where the text is changed.

1 Fitzgerald, op. cit.

Literature Related in Subject Matter to this Thesis

Some studies have been made of the bearing of ancient Scriptures on Latter-day Saint philosophy and writings. Their findings may be related to the findings of this thesis; in any case their purpose and intent is somewhat similar.

Dr. Sidney B. Sperry has investigated the extent to which parallels exist in the Book of Mormon and Bible.² His analysis of the source of such material in the Book of Mormon as parallels material in Matthew and the writings of Paul may suggest the source of some of the parallels that are found in the Doctrine and Covenants.

The problem of Isaiah texts in the Book of Mormon³ studied by H. Grant Vest seeks to discover "upon what authority Joseph Smith modified the text" in places where material quoted from Isaiah does not correspond to the text as found in the King James Version of the Bible. A like study could be made of apparent quotations in the Doctrine and Covenants, but the present investigation cannot undertake this added problem. As to method of investigation the thesis by Mr. Vest is a study in historical criticism, particularly of the "lower criticism" branch, in that it is concerned with matters of context. In procedure it has therefore something in common with this thesis.

A study of the Minor Prophets\(^1\) with special reference to Latter-day Saint philosophy by Rex Lorenzo Christensen discusses each of these twelve prophetic books of the Old Testament as to historical background, message, and pertinence to our times and times yet to come. The fact that many prophetic utterances in the Doctrine and Covenants pertain to items and events also dealt with by such prophets as Amos, Joel, Malachi, and Micah, would lead one to expect that similar language might be used in expressing similar concepts. Thus, when considering passages from the Doctrine and Covenants dealing with the "great and dreadful day of the Lord" it would be logical to look at phrases indexed from the prophet Joel to find parallels. This sort of procedure has been used to some avail in point of time-saving. The thesis by Mr. Christensen contributed less, however, to the present researcher's background than did a book analyzing the message of the twelve Minor Pro-

Considering the subject matter treated, Mr. Christensen's thesis treats those things which were said by the ancient prophets with reference to us of the latter days; my study treats those things said by a latter-day prophet in similar vein, or manner.

A study of the character of Joseph Smith, based on his own literary productions² by Elmer Peterson has almost no relationship to the present study, inasmuch as Mr. Peterson rarely cites the Doctrine and Covenants as a source of his observation of the Prophet's productions. The intent of his thesis apparently did not warrant such observation.

Most directly related to the present study in subject matter, and, to some extent, in methods, is the thesis already mentioned, by Fitzgerald.³ Whereas he sought to learn the extent and nature of changes in the Book of Commandments as it was revised to become the Doctrine and Covenants, the present study observes the nature and extent of Biblical textual parallels in the changed passages. The history of these two books is presented by Fitzgerald and is accordingly not repeated in this present study.

⁴Fitzgerald, op. cit.
While other studies of the Bible, both of Old and New Testaments by various writers have contributed somewhat to the present researcher's background in general preparation for this study, none have been directly enough related to demand recognition here.

As a matter of fact the chapter on "Related Literature" and the "Bibliography" of this thesis are quite limited because it is somewhat of a pioneering venture. Aside from incidental cross-reference studies by various students of the Scriptures on occasion, and the studies of Orson Pratt in supplying the references to other Scriptures among the cross-references found in editions of the Doctrine and Covenants since 1876, little study of a like nature seems to have been done. This observation has been corroborated by Dr. Sperry and others of the Division of Religion Faculty of the Brigham Young University.
CHAPTER III

THE DATA

In the presentation of the data, parallel-line copies of the word-groups considered as "textual parallels" are presented, their sources cited, and classification of them indicated. The terms and symbols used in the classification have been described in Chapter I.

At the top of each page, the letters "D" and "B" followed by numbers serve to identify respectively the section of the Doctrine and Covenants and chapter of the Book of Commandments from which material on the page is taken. In case there was no difference in the wording from these two books, only one line is given to represent both, and symbols down the left-hand side of the page will cite the verses from which the material was taken for each line. Thus, a phrase or clause marked "D. 6 (4)" on a page marked "D 34" obviously is quoted from B 36. Doctrine and Covenants 34:6 and Book of Commandments 36:4.

Sources of the parallel text need no special explanation. If a parallel text has been previously used, its re-use is indicated thus: "See D. 29:14 . If the Doctrine and Covenants from Ex. 19:13" text differs from the Book of Commandments text, a line is given for each, with the proper identification.

THE ANALYSIS

Introduction

The data presented in the foregoing chapter can be quite effectively analyzed for the solution of the thesis problem by means of tables. Following a brief introduction, the present chapter will consist principally in tabulations.

The general problem is: What textual relationship does the Doctrine and Covenants bear to the Bible?

The first phase of the solution is shown in Table 1, giving the number of textual parallels found, and the ratio per verse for each section. Each section is classified also in this table with regard to how the revelation was received and what subject matter generally it contains. Explanation of symbols used is supplied in a more specific introduction preceding the table.

The number of parallels re-used after having been located once is shown also in Table 1, both as to number per section and per verse. Further, the trend in using new and reused parallels is shown in Graph 1, charted according to ratio per verse.

The various types of parallels as described in Chapter 1, pp. 3-4 have been enumerated for each section in Table 2.
All have been totaled and the percentage of each type is shown.

Whereas Table 2 pertains to parallels found in both the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Commandments, Tables 3, 4 and 5 show the distribution and location of parallels found in each but not found in both. Whether the parallels are similarly used in altered passages as in the unaltered will be somewhat shown thereby. The location shown will permit study of each passage if desired.

Table 6 presents a cross-reference list showing the location of the sources of the parallels in each book of the Bible and the frequency of their appearance expressed in number per page of each book of the Bible is shown in Table 7.

Table 8 tabulates samples of the various uses served by the parallels as described in Chapter 1, page 4. These are referred to as "samples" because they include only those parallels which could quite certainly be classified as to use. Enumeration of this aspect would hardly be significant, except as the most frequent and least frequent types of usage are observable. Some analyses of the purposes served by the parallels will be presented, however.

Table 9 shows the sources of the sampling of parallels from the Book of Mormon. Table 10 presents an analysis of these comparable to that for the Bible parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants in Table 2.
Number and Frequency of Parallels

In tabulating the number of parallels found for each section of the Doctrine and Covenants and the corresponding chapter of the Book of Commandments in such manner as to make available for ready observation any apparent differences in frequency and any evident relationship of such difference to the type of revelation or of subject matter concerned, the following column headings are supplied, and the information in each column shown in figures or code letters as follows.

The first column identifies the section by number and by the date each section or group of sections was received.

The second column shows how the revelation was received; the classes are suggested by or derived directly from the opening words to the introduction to each section as now appearing in the Doctrine and Covenants, which, in turn, were drawn from comments made by the prophet himself in the Documentary History of the Church. Most of them are designated simply "Revelation"; the term abbreviated to "Rev." in the table. Those recording the words of a divine messenger are designated in the table as "Angel". Those which the prophet received by instrumentality of the Urim and Thummim are shown as "Rev. UT". One is specified as a "Commandment of God", and is so identified in the table. Some specifically mention that a number of persons were present when the revelation was received and dictated by the prophet; when the number so mentioned amounts to three or more persons, the number is noted in parentheses under the class-symbol thus: "Rev" (6).

The subject matter embraced in general by each section is identified as:

I:--Instructions or directions to individuals or to the Church;

O:--Organization, offices, authority, Priesthood;

D:--Doctrine and principles, subclassified as:

  g:--general,
  e:--eschatological,
  m:--moral.

These are rather broad classes, but will serve the purpose of showing whether the frequency of parallels shows any modal trend according to subject matter concerned.

The remaining five columns employ figures to show, respectively, the total number of parallels found in each section; the number used repeatedly, in two or more places; the total number of verses in the section; the ratio of parallels per verse; the ratio of re-used parallels per verse.

The purpose of the latter column is to note whether the prophet tended to get a "stock" of phrases or clauses which he used again and again, and whether or not he continued to add new word groups parallel to sources not before used in the earlier revelations. To facilitate this analysis the information presented in the last two columns is repeated in graphic form in Graph 1.

NUMBER OF NEW AND RE-USED PARALLELS PER VERSE FOR EACH SECTION

Upper Profile: New Parallels

Section: 5 10 15 20 25 30 35 40 45 50 55 60

(5.00)

Lower Profile: Re-used Parallels
Generalization

Examination of key words in about five thousand word groups yielded about 2 parallels out of every 5 examined, for a total of 2,123 found in the 64 sections of the Doctrine and Covenants. Nine of the sections have 2 or more parallels per verse; 38 of them have from 1 to 2 per verse; 17 have less than 1. The range of frequency is from .33 per verse to 5.00 per verse; the median is about 1.30.

At first sight it does not appear that any particular type of revelation or of subject matter was productive of a typically higher or lower number of parallels than any other. Those sections having 2 or more per verse represent all types and all subject-matter classes, as do also those having 1 per verse or less.

Particular examination of those sections containing predominantly "instructional" type of subject matter, such as Sections 9, 15, 16, 48, etc., reveals that 4 out of 6 sections having less than .5 parallels per verse are of this type. One section of this type, however, has 2.33 per verse, and another has 2 per verse (See Sections 31 and 40).

Some significance may attach to the fact that 7 of the sections pertaining to things eschatological contain more than the median of 1.30 parallels per verse, while only 3 contain less than the median.

Section 4, with its brief admonitions and doctrine contains the highest number of parallels per verse.
As to manner of reception of the revelations the most striking observation is that the two containing the words of an angel and the one specified as "a commandment of God and not of man" (See Sections 2, 13, 19) are among the lowest in ratio of repeated parallels per verse. This becomes less significant, however, in view of the fact that Section 2 had little antecedent material to repeat from.

The revelations received by means of the Urim and Thummim are typically low in number of parallels; only 3 of the 11 have more than the median number per verse.

The number of people present receiving the revelations has no apparent bearing upon the number of Scriptural parallels they contain. One given in the presence of six Elders (Section 29) has 2.18 per verse; another given to twelve Elders (Section 42) has only .94. Several given "to the church" or "at a conference" have close to the median number.

Graph 1, showing the frequency of parallels occurring for each section shows little that appears significant as to frequency trend. The first 16 like the last 16 sections have exactly 8 above and 8 below the median. In the center of the chart, representing Sections 17-47 inclusive, the mode appears to the eye to be above the median, but actual count reveals but 17 above and 15 below.

Somewhat surprising is the fact that new parallels, not previously used, continue to appear consistently. The line representing the number of re-used parallels per verse maintains the same median for the last 16 sections as for the whole, .44.
per verse. The middle runs a little higher, having 19 sections above and 13 below the median.

Of the really frequently repeated phrases or clauses only three have been re-used more than ten times. "Verily, I say unto you," is the most frequent, appearing some one hundred eighty times. Next, "And it shall come to pass"—eighteen times. Varieties of the sentence, "I am the light which shineth in the darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not", are next most frequent, having been used some thirteen times. A glance at the lists of locations of the parallels, in Table 6, will readily show which Biblical references have word-groups used in more than one place in the Doctrine and Covenants.
How Closely Do the Texts Studied Parallel Each Other

In truth, the term "textual parallel" suits only a very limited number of textual passages found to be similar to each other in the Scriptures studied, for the term "parallel" as used to describe the position of two or more lines with respect to each other is an absolute term. In the case of textual passages, only those which are verbatim equivalents of each other are absolutely parallel; the remainder only approach parallelism.

In adapting the term to present use, verbatim parallels six words or more in length are marked "SWCy".

Those quite similar in wording and context, having from three to five words verbatim, or four or more similar with one or two varied words are marked "SWC".

In Table 2, all others similar in context and at all similar in wording are counted for a column as a type of near-parallels.

Word groups similar in vocabulary and syntax, but having evidently different meaning in the two sources, are likewise enumerated in a separate column, headed "SW".

A sampling of texts similar in meaning but different in wording, marked "SC" have also been counted. Enumeration of these is hardly significant, as the present study does not presume to present more than a mere sampling.

Tabulation of these five types of parallels and near-parallels—all called "parallels" in this report—follows in Table 2.

Generalizations

The most evident, and perhaps most significant aspect of the distribution of the types of parallels is the conspicuous dearth of verbatim parallels. Only 1.2 per cent of the more than two thousand cases parallel each other exactly, with sufficient words to seem more than merely coincidental.

Even when added to the "SWC" class the combined groups constitute less than one-third of all of the so-called parallels found. There are only thirty-eight of them that are twelve words in length or longer.

Fifty-nine per cent, or nearly three-fifths of all are phrases and clauses which have usually more than two words not alike.

A rather small proportion, 3.5 per cent, consists of word groups of the "SW" class—similar in wording but quite different in meaning from their textual counterparts in the Bible. Whether they are borrowed from the Bible and adapted to new uses cannot be known with certainty. It would be impossible to generalize concerning the manner in which they are used. Each must be studied in its old and new context if the likelihood of borrowing and adaptation is to be established. Some which seem to have been so adapted are marked "ad", as before explained.

A more thorough, and for practical purposes more apparently useful, study could be made of the remaining class, the "SC" type of parallelism. The principles and doctrines treated in common by the modern and ancient Scriptures are many and much is to be learned from the study of both. The parallels of this sort selected for this study constitute 6.6 per cent of the total, but many more could be found. They are included only as a sample of texts which are similar not by reason of vocabulary, but because of common concepts expressed.
Parallels to Texts in Which the Doctrine and Covenants Differs from the Book of Commandments

This problem is only incidental to the major thesis problem. Since investigation of it is so readily afforded by the materials at hand, it is briefly considered.

Tables 3 and 4 show the classification and location of Biblical parallels to verses which are found in either but not in common in both the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Commandments. Table 5 shows whether alterations within verses has made the Doctrine and Covenants text more like the Biblical text paralleling it or less like it, or whether neither effect is evident.

The material is given in addition to that in Table 2, in which classifications may be seen for the following sections of the Doctrine and Covenants which have no equivalent chapters in the Book of Commandments: Doctrine and Covenants Sections 2, 13, 32, 51, 57.

Generalization

Although classifications for Sections 32 and 51 as seen in Table 2 would lead one to suppose the new material added to the Doctrine and Covenants which has no equivalent in the Book of Commandments more nearly parallels the comparable Bible passages, this observation is not supported by Table 3. The general trend for all of the parallels prevails here; viz., there are few verbatim parallels, a few more of the "SWC" type, and the majority (59 per cent as in Table 2) are of the more loosely parallel types.

There are very few verses of the Book of Commandments which have no counterpart in the Doctrine and Covenants. Such as there are have a few of these same loosely parallel types.

Examination of the verses cited for both books in Table 5 indicates that in exactly half of the cases of alterations made in the preparation of the Doctrine and Covenants the wording is more like the comparable Biblical texts. In two out of fourteen cases the Book of Commandments text is more like the Bible. In five cases neither seems more like the Biblical text than the other.

A few examples of the nature of the alterations are noteworthy. In D. 27:15-18 one of the few long verbatim parallels is found. It is like Eph. 6:13-16. It is not found in the Book of Commandments. In D. 42:68 the word "wisdom" is supplied instead of "knowledge" in B. 44:52, making the wording more like James 1:5. In B. 7:3 the specific spiritual gift of "working with the rod" comparable to Exodus 3:10 is changed in D. 8:7 to embrace the general gift or calling of Aaron. Sometimes the change is very minor, as "you" in B. 45:29 changed to "ye" in D. 43:24 to correspond with "ye" in Matt. 23:37; "to" in B. 45:25 appears as "unto" in D. 43:22, making it more like Matt. 24:27.

On the other hand "to" in D. 43:21 is less like Gen. 44:18 than "in" in B. 45:24.

A more significant matter is the changed situation reflected in D. 42:30 as compared to B. 44:26, a possible parallel to which is seen in the situations in Acts 4:32-37 compared to Acts 11:27-30. Total consecration of property in the first place is varied to contributions of goods for the poor later; the parallel is a contextual rather than textual one, and as such is not a primary one in the solution of our present problem.

In general, there is little evidence of use of the Bible text in making alterations in wording, beyond the type or degree of influence it has had on the original composition of the text.
Location of the Sources of the Parallels in Each Book of the Bible

It became evident as the collection of data proceeded that certain books of the Bible were supplying large numbers of textual parallels to the phrasing in the Doctrine and Covenants. To determine the number with what frequency they were found in each book of the Bible, lists were tabulated of the location of each pair of passages considered parallel. The references so tabulated are arranged in chronological order of appearance in each book of the Bible.

Simple enumeration gives the total found in each book. Since the books of the Bible vary so greatly in length, an index to the frequency of occurrence of the parallels in each book was computed in terms of the number per page.

The major fault of this type of analysis arises from the fact that some common phrases may be found in any of several books; for this study only one location was chosen. The general tendency was to select the earliest source, other reasons for the selection being equal. One common expression which occurred one hundred and eighty times was not listed in this table from any particular source, though it is recorded in the data. Distortion due to frequently repeated constructions will not be so great as to obscure certain important general tendencies, which will be pointed out.

Table 6 presents the location of the sources of the parallels; Table 7 lists in order of ascending frequency the ratio found in each Biblical book.

Generalizations

The non-technical and rather unrefined measurements presented in Tables 6 and 7 will not permit many specific observations as to relationships between Biblical books and the Doctrine and Covenants. A few general facts are evident, however.

There is much more similarity in subject matter and manner of expression in the New Testament compared to the Doctrine and Covenants than in the Old Testament.

Some Old Testament books, however, contain sources of parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants comparable in frequency to New Testament books of the lower and middle brackets of frequency. Isaiah, with a total of 127, and a ratio of 2.12 is comparable to II Corinthians and Acts in ratio, but comes third after John and Matthew in total number and is of importance as a source not reflected by comparison with Jude's total of five on a half-page showing a ratio of 10!

Malachi shows a high rate per page but there are several frequently repeated phrasings that parallel texts from this source, and the total of 16 citations from 8 different verse-locations in this book leaves it not one of the sources.

Joel, with 29 citations to verses in its brief four pages, is noteworthy.

Matthew, with 336, not including the 180 repetitions of "verily, I say unto you" supplies passages numbering more than half the total supplied by the whole Old Testament. The sum of sources found in Matthew, John and Revelations exceeds the sum from all the Old Testament books.
Some Purposes Served by the Parallels

One of the interesting phases of this study is the analysis of the purposes served by the use of phrasing in the Doctrine and Covenants similar to that of the Bible. The tabulations in Table 8 do not present a classification of all of the parallels cited in the data collected. In many cases they serve simply as part of the language of the prophet; they are by him as they are used by people commonly in prayers and religious speech generally.

Some, however, are obviously chosen not as mere building blocks of grammar and rhetoric, but because they express ideas which the new revelation reiterates, elucidates, expands or otherwise recalls for further comment.

The first type of parallels listed, making one of the longest lists in Table 8, consists of "prophecies reiterated". As pointed out in the analysis of Table 1, for example, when the new revelation pertains to things eschatological, information already given by prophecy of old is frequently drawn upon for reiteration, emphasis or further comment by the modern prophet, and like other writers of Scripture of other days he quotes or adapts from those before him.¹

¹See Acts 2:16-21 in which Peter cites prophecy, combines, edits, and adds to it. Compare John 16:12 with 1 Cor. 3:2 in which the two writers have perhaps drawn from a common source. Joel 4:16 uses the same expression as Amos 1:2; Isaiah 2:2 and Micah 4:2 parallel each other. See Doctrine and Covenants 29:14 and compare Isa. 58:1, 12:10 and Rev. 6:12-17, 8:7 and 19:17 concerning cataclysmic events at the end of the age.
In many cases the latter-day prophet speaks of the fulfillment in this dispensation of prophecies of old which foresaw these times. Table 8 supplies also a list of samples of parallels used incident to this type of subject matter.

Apparent allusions and specific historical allusions also have been selected from the data and are listed.

At times events of one age parallel those of other times and on occasion the Doctrine and Covenants employs language reminiscent of other times in speaking of such situations. A list of historical parallels is given.

Samples of reiterations other than the more specifically predictive prophetic reiterations are also shown.

At times the modern prophet interprets and clarifies or otherwise elucidates passages from other Scripture. A few examples of this function in which parallels of expression are employed are included in Table 8.

Finally, cases in which familiar expressions like, "In whom I am well pleased" are re-applied to new situations. These are for the most part the "SW" class marked in the data and sorted out and listed here as examples of similar wording adapted to different context or meaning.

Generalizations

Genuine relationship in terms of subjects treated as well as language employed in the Scriptural works studied is evidenced by some of the parallels, the uses of which have been identified and classified. Doubtless many more could be found. Sometimes parallels have been difficult to locate; a gem composed of familiar-sounding elements in Doctrine and Covenants 58:27-32, or in 59:20 may illustrate. In other cases the elements parallel and those added are clearly evident as in D. 46:15-33 concerning the same spiritual gifts as listed in I Corinthians 12, or in D. 58:45 concerning fulfillment of the blessing upon Ephraim spoken by Moses and recorded in Deut. 33:17.

One of the great contributions of modern prophecy is illustrated in part by the manner in which some of the textual parallels are used as divine guidance is given in modern times similar to and in addition to that given in times past for the eternal good of man.
Parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants
in the Book of Mormon

Because it became evident at the outset of the collection of data that allusions to the Book of Mormon and parallels to its text were also to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants, a study of the relationship of these books was undertaken along with the primary study. When it became impossible to continue it because of the requirements of the labor and the consumption of time, the introductory work done was yet retained in the data because of certain interesting relationships that appeared to bear somewhat on the primary problem.

A brief analysis of the nature of these Book of Mormon sources of parallels is presented in Tables 9 and 10 and a few generalizations thereafter. Table 9 shows the classification of these ninety-eight textual excerpts with regard to the nearness of the parallelism from this source. Table 10 presents the location in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants where each pair of comparable lines is found.

Generalizations

Table 9 indicates that the parallelism between the sources here considered is closer than the general run of parallels from the Biblical source. This observation is borne out by closer examination of samples of the text. It exists not only in those instances where the subject matter alludes to Book of Mormon peoples and events as is frequently the case in Section 5 of the Doctrine and Covenants\(^1\), but also in several instances where a Biblical parallel is found also\(^2\). Moreover, there are a number of cases where parallel sources are found exclusively in the Book of Mormon though the subject matter does not apparently allude to that source\(^3\). Why it is so, and why parallels are found in revelations received in 1828 and 1829 comparable to texts in the Book of Mormon are problems for historical investigation. Which is the source of the other, or are they both from a common source? The fact that by the summer of 1828 only the one hundred and sixteen pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript had been done which subsequently were lost, and the fact that most of the work on the Book of Mormon was done in the early spring of 1829 bear upon the solution.

In this connection, another problem of interest arises

\(^1\) See especially Doctrine and Covenants 5:3,9,11,12; also 3:17,18,21.

\(^3\) Ibid. 3:20; 4:2; 5:6,16,21,35.
as one examines Table 10. There are many apparent allusions in Section 3, which is dated July, 1828, to the books of Moroni, Alma, Mosiah, et. al., which history does not show to have been translated by that time. Whether the prophet had studied the whole text of the Book of Mormon plates from the autumn of 1827 and was formulating the phrasing of the translation concurrently with his reception of some of these early revelations is a matter that might be investigated of the problem merit it.

In any case, the reasons for the appearance of Biblical parallels in the Doctrine and Covenants ought to be investigated in light of the reasons why Book of Mormon parallels also are found there.

In altering the Book of Commandments text to the present form of the Doctrine and Covenants it might be noted that D. 5:11 is more like II Nephi 11:3 plus Ether 5:3 than is B. 4:4. But lest a false assumption be drawn from this one instance, it is noteworthy that many warnings found in B. 4:5,6 parallel to III Nephi texts are not found in the text of D. 5:19-20.

The obvious frequency of parallels from the Book of Mormon sources seen in the number of them in the first five Sections of the Doctrine and Covenants is also noteworthy. As already mentioned, it is not uncommon to find parallels from this source when none is found from Biblical texts.
CHAPTER 5

CONCLUSIONS

Introduction

Some Assumptions and Concessions

In this attempt to discover some of the factors in the apparent relationship between the Doctrine and Covenants and the Bible, some assumptions have been necessary. In the first place, it has been assumed that parallels signify relationship; i.e. that both volumes speak of some of the same things in the same way in certain places, and are therefore related in subject matter and in manner of expression. Perhaps the study should have been limited to clear allusions and quotations, that a more certain basis of relationship might have been determined. To identify allusions and quotations is, however, often difficult if not impossible, for it is plausible that three to six or even more words similarly employed in similar arrangement in two different sources may be coincidentally parallel and without indication that one alludes to the other or that they are from a common source.

The procedure and purpose in this study therefore consisted of seeking out phrasing used in common by two Scriptures, observing the degree of similarity and some of the ends served by the parallels found.
Some Principles Governing the Formulation of Conclusions

That the conclusions drawn from the data and analysis may be as sound as possible, the following fallacious procedures have been avoided insofar as possible:

1. Drawing conclusions from single or very limited number of instances.
2. Observing of positive instances to the neglect of negative cases.
3. Employment only of evidence supporting prejudices.
4. Attributing to a single cause, effects resulting possibly from two or more causes.
5. Unwarranted conclusions from non-technical and unrefined measurements, estimates and guesses.
6. Overdrawing the significance of analogous phrasing, the essential data of the investigation.

The particulars leading to the following conclusions must be noted in the generalizations following each table.

Conclusions Concerning Each Phase of the Problem

The answer to the primary problem in brief is this: The Doctrine and Covenants text is related to the Biblical text to the extent of having in every two verses about three phrases or clauses quite parallel to some Biblical phrase or clause, in vocabulary and syntax and often also in concept expressed. That there is, however, much original material in the Doctrine and Covenants—evident to any student of its content and contributions—is suggested by the fact that, in this present study, of every five parallels suspected or sought, only two were found. Admittedly, before a general statement of fact with regard to the ratio of new material to old in the Doctrine and Covenants could be made more studies and more technical measurements would be necessary, but still it seems a safe hypothesis that the Doctrine and Covenants contains much more than a mere conglomeration of Biblical texts.

The ratio of reused parallels to new ones in each section shows that the writer did not merely accumulate a "stock" of Biblical phrasing, but consistently chose wording new or reused according to the needs of the subject matter. It is evident that the Doctrine and Covenants text most resembles the Bible in manner of expression when its subject matter is similar, as when both speak of the end of the world, the universal moral principles, or doctrines of atonement, or life's goals. The word of God found in the modern Scripture spoken "by the Spirit" coming from the same source as ancient Scripture is in many ways akin to it. When the revelation came as ideas flowing into the mind from the divine source, to be expressed in the revelator's own language it appears that he used a manner of speech familiar to him, adapting words and phrases at his command, using freely phrasing like that of the Bible but seldom taking it verbatim or at any great length from that source, and seldom drawing a sustained succession of parallels from a given location. Examination of any single page of the passages collected in this thesis will corroborate such an assertion.

There is little evidence that in the process of revising the text for publication of the first Doctrine and Covenants some phrasing was altered to become more closely parallel to comparable Bible texts.¹ The fact that only seven such passages occur however among the near two thousand non-verbatim parallels leaves little evidence indeed that such alteration was of major concern in the revising.

The main conclusion to be drawn from observation of the location of the sources of the textual parallels is that the New Testament is much more extensively related in subject matter and manner to the Doctrine and Covenants than is the Old Testament. The ratios indicating this state have been previously given. Certain books of the Old Testament however are exceptions to this generalization. It would seem that those whose content relates considerably to the latter days are the most frequent sources. It may be significant that some of these very books are those from which warnings and promises were given at the outset to the young prophet by the angel Moroni.²

¹Doctrine and Covenants 18:44, 31:13. Note also that no change in the number or manner of use of the parallel Scriptures occurs incident to the coming of Sidney Rigdon as aid and scribe to the prophet Joseph Smith (35:20); this thesis gives no support to the quite common hypothesis that the hand of man--especially the man Sidney Rigdon--shaped much of what the prophet produced.

²Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:36-41; particularly Joel, Isaiah, Malachi.
Many parallels in context as well as wording are derived from reiteration of prophecies or teachings, observation of fulfillment of prophecies, elucidation upon or other allusion to materials in those books and others of similar content. That content has much to do with origination of parallels is evident from the great number of them from Matt. 24 concerning the end of the earth and the second coming of the Son of Man.

Other factors in bringing about the familiar and frequent use of certain books as sources of similar wording and concepts would have to be studied before further conclusions could be drawn or good hypotheses projected.

Book of Mormon parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants are, in the few sections studied, frequent and in many cases unparalleled by Biblical sources. Quite often when all three Scriptures run parallel, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants texts agree where the Biblical text differs. Some of the revelations (e.g. Sec. 3) which antedate completion of the Book of Mormon contain phrasing like that of Alma, Mosiah, III Nephi, Ether, exclusive of similarity to the Bible. What constituted the common source of such expressions in the two Scriptures might be sought out.

Most of the parallels are unclassified as to use; they function as parts of the new composition without evident allusion to situations in other Scriptures. Of those which could be quite certainly classified, the most common functions were to reiterate prophecies and to allude to former situations or teachings, whether for purpose of re-emphasis, clarification, expansion, etc. Samples are cited in Table 8 and the examples need to be examined in the data.

Further Studies Suggested

The completion of the project here begun is the first extension of related investigation that suggests itself. Answers to the same problems derived from investigation of the later revelations would prove interesting.

The completion of a related project undertaken in the beginning of the present research should likewise merit and reward its pursuit—the study of textual parallels to the Doctrine and Covenants as found in the Book of Mormon. Similar searches into the Pearl of Great Price, and into the religious literature and sermons of Joseph Smith's day of revelation; it is not suggested, however, that this last is a procedure of prime importance for one seeking to learn from the Scriptures and come to appreciation of them.

Though it has been noted that much is reiterated in the Doctrine and Covenants concerning certain items presented also in other Scriptures, an interesting and likely quite revealing study could be made of the new information given by it for which no parallels exist.

Also, new concepts given in this dispensation and not before revealed might be sought out and studied.

Aid in interpreting Biblical prophecies given by the Doctrine and Covenants through interpretation; identification of peoples, places, or times; elucidation, expansion, etc.
would be a rewarding end to seek.

A more complete cross-reference citing location of related teachings in the various Scriptures ought to be developed.

Significance of Such Studies

Any such studies are significant if they contribute toward the understanding of the Scriptures and if done with a proper attitude; for there is an attitude as essential to this field as the scientific attitude is to the fields of physical investigation—an attitude of trust in God, whereupon He promises the true faculty for spiritual research: "I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind..." ¹
