

2018

Mouse House

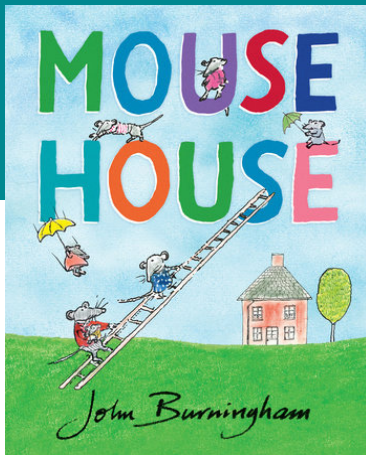

Rebecca Lambert

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/cbmr>

BYU ScholarsArchive Citation

Lambert, Rebecca (2018) "Mouse House," Children's Book and Media Review: Vol. 39 : Iss. 11 , Article 88.
Available at: <https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/cbmr/vol39/iss11/88>

This Book Review is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in Children's Book and Media Review by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.

Book Review

Mouse House

This house has a family of humans and a family of mice. The mice try to make sure that no humans see them, but one day one of the human children sees the mice and tells his parents. The parents panic and call an exterminator. The children leave the mice a note to warn them, and the mice escape just in time to the yard. The children make them a small trampoline and other playground equipment, but the mice leave for the winter. After winter ends, the children see the mice in their house once again, and this time they don't tell their parents.

This is a well-written picture book with beautiful illustrations. John Burningham's illustrations bring the story to life and give the mice heart and character. They are dressed like small people and have human-like mannerisms. This book is great for its intended audience. It's written in language that small children can understand, and the pictures help tell the story. The message of helping those who are different from you is a great thing for children to learn.

Author

John Burningham

Illustrator

John Burningham

Reviewer

Rebecca Lambert

Rating

Excellent

Level

Toddler, Preschool,
Primary

Pages

28

Year

2017

Publisher

Candlewick Press

ISBN

9781536200393