Who's throwing water at Hedgehog and Rabbit? Having never encountered rain before, Rabbit is offended and Hedgehog is tickled when they mysteriously start to get wet. The two friends go on a quest to find the culprit. After questioning a forgetful hen and three wise owls, they settle down in a hollow log to wait until blue sky returns in the morning.

Pablo Albo's story of two innocent friends experiencing rain for the first time will appeal to young children, who will be able to relate to the wonder of discovering their world. Children will also enjoy the chance to be the authority on this common weather pattern they have already experienced. The format which bounces back and forth between narration and speech bubbles lends itself to being a mentor text, helping teachers segue their instruction into the art of writing and illustrating in various formats.
