Raj and his dad have the perfect day planned. They are going to go check out a book from the library, visit the farm, eat at the café, and many other fun things. It is going to be a great father-son activity day! There is only one problem—Raj’s dad has misplaced his wallet. Without his library card and a way to pay for the different activities, their plans seem to be ruined. Raj feels sad and disappointed, but fortunately, Raj’s dad saves the day when he comes up with other fun plans for the two to do together that don’t cost any money. Their father-son day isn’t ruined after all!

Raj and the Best Day Ever! is a cheerful, heartwarming story about a father and son making the most out of a tough situation and spending quality time together. This story helps children understand that sometimes plans change, and that’s okay. And sometimes, the new plans turn out to be better than the old ones. This book also shows that quality time doesn’t have to include elaborate activities or spending money—even simple activities are fun and memorable because loved ones are doing them together. The illustrations are bright and colorful. The endpapers include numerous people and objects that are found in the pages of the book, making a fun scavenger hunt activity for children and readers.
