Two Poems

Jean S. Marshall

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq
Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Marshall, Jean S. (1975) "Two Poems," BYU Studies Quarterly. Vol. 15 : Iss. 1 , Article 9. Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol15/iss1/9

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Two Poems

Jean S. Marshall*

MUSEUM PIECE

Impaled, moth-like, on the wood,
He hung there dying.
Without struggle He yielded
to the Light.

For centuries they have let Him hang—
in stone,
in delicate, yellowing ivory,
on dark and crimson canvases,
in painted effigies of wood,
the unique specimen, multiplied,
a twisted image
of torture and of death,
obscuring all His days of giving
to broken men new eyes,
diminishing His Gethsemane
where the weight of utter penitence bore down on Him alone for us,
ignoring the bright and empty tomb
where He unfolded wings of light
from His celestial cocoon.

A Romanesque crucifix in Barcelona, Spain.

*Mrs. Don Marshall, a wife and mother in Provo, has an M.A. in English from Brigham Young University. She has also taught English at the University of Hawaii.
Photograph of Gislebertus' three kings stone carving in Autun, France.

ROMANESQUE

I wish I had imagined magi sleeping.

I know the thread of scripture and the legends all embroidered of caravan and quest with incense and with gold for homage, then the dream and the departure by another way.

I know some doubt the birth. Some doubt that regal journey.

But in a distant century Gislebertus chipped from stone three friends waiting.

He saw the magi sleeping three short fellows side by side under a coverlet of curving lines and the angel (bending stiffly in air) touching (with one finger) whispering (I'm sure) urgently to say, "The star appears" (upper right) "The King is born."