4-1-1979

Pioneers– The Lace-Maker

Sally T. Taylor

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Hands which had made the lace now pushed the plow
Across cracking fields of reclaimed wasteland.
The hot smell of summer pushed the past to
A kalidescope of half-lost fragments:
The acrid odor of wool coats drying
By the hearth as English storms sang outdoors;
The promised magic of new thread, spider-
Fine and smoothly waiting for careful form;
The close quietness of old artisans
Forming familiar patterns, net-like with
The fragile flourish and curve for a trim,
So different from this straight, hard, dry furrow.
The lace-maker stopped his horse and slapped at
A lean horsefly buzzing his steaming neck.
These eyes burned by the base dust and stung by
The sun would never again see that life.
Dirt-gloved hands would not form the silky threads
In fine designs of royal-ranked stature.
He had lost that past to the channeled task-
Master of time and life-revolving faith.
Faith! His hands felt for the wood smooth handles.
Gee Hah! The worn horse huffed away the flies
And stepped slowly on, pulling a new type
Of pattern in the solid soil of now.

Sally T. Taylor is an assistant professor in the English Department, Brigham Young University.
"Pioneers—The Lace-Maker" was the 1978 First Place poem in the Ann W. Hafen category of the Utah State Poetry Society Contest.

250