Home and Office

Edward L. Hart

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol22/iss4/8
Home and Office

When people leave home and go to a bar, Auden said, they try to make it look like home.
And I guess what's true of people going to bars
Is true of people going to offices too.
At least, I pass by doors along the hall
To my office and catch a glimpse of a snug boudoir:
Soft lamplight, carpets, and reclining chairs,
Cushioned and plumped, inviting R and R.
And why not, I think: old Auden was an oaf.
Be comfortable! And if you'd rather be home
Than working, pretend you're still home and buy
An upholstered recliner and a tinted lamp.
I'm just jealous, you can tell, as you walk through the door
Of my workplace, Spartan and cluttered in naked light,
With maybe a hair shirt hidden somewhere.
But Arnold Stein comes back to my mind from Seattle.
His door was across from mine: the battered
Wooden desk and chair and an ammunition
Box for student consultations. I was told
He was a German POW during World War II.
I never asked him. He wasn't my idol or anything,
But he worked hard and seemed to get a lot done.
It's time to get out of here and try to forget it.
But first let me mention one virtue of austerity—
It's easy to leave it, no enfolding and holding,
Just pack up and get out. So I'm going home now.
And when I get there, there's one thing fairly sure:
I don't want to make my bedroom look like my office.

—Edward L. Hart

Edward L. Hart, recipient of the Association for Mormon Letters poetry award in 1979 for To Utah, is a retired professor of English from Brigham Young University.