Home and Office

Edward L. Hart

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol22/iss4/8

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Home and Office

When people leave home and go to a bar, Auden said, they try to make it look like home. And I guess what’s true of people going to bars is true of people going to offices too. At least, I pass by doors along the hall to my office and catch a glimpse of a snug boudoir: soft lamplight, carpets, and reclining chairs, cushioned and plumped, inviting R and R. And why not, I think: old Auden was an oaf. Be comfortable! And if you’d rather be home than working, pretend you’re still home and buy an upholstered recliner and a tinted lamp. I’m just jealous, you can tell, as you walk through the door of my workplace, Spartan and cluttered in naked light, with maybe a hair shirt hidden somewhere. But Arnold Stein comes back to my mind from Seattle. His door was across from mine: the battered wooden desk and chair and an ammunition box for student consultations. I was told he was a German POW during World War II. I never asked him. He wasn’t my idol or anything, but he worked hard and seemed to get a lot done. It’s time to get out of here and try to forget it. But first let me mention one virtue of austerity—it’s easy to leave it, no enfolding and holding, just pack up and get out. So I’m going home now. And when I get there, there’s one thing fairly sure: I don’t want to make my bedroom look like my office.

—Edward L. Hart

Edward L. Hart, recipient of the Association for Mormon Letters poetry award in 1979 for To Utah, is a retired professor of English from Brigham Young University.