Wintering

Loretta M. Sharp

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Part of the Mormon Studies Commons, and the Religious Education Commons

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Wintering

Nothing clouds the moon round
in the early sky, and grasses stand stiff, slicked with the silver of first frost.

Two geese cleave the silence with the even beat of wings, grey in morning grey.
Pulled towards wintering, one veers, the other with it, and then a dip into the smooth move of their southern bent.

We cannot know if sun or stars compel, or winds, or if it is a listening to the sea a thousand miles away, but such mating shapes the space between them in an easy hold.

And you and I, love—we, too, must trust the patternings, we, too, must trust and leave unsaid all things lost to consciousness.

—Loretta M. Sharp

Loretta M. Sharp teaches at the Interlochen Arts Academy, Interlochen, Michigan, where she established the writing program in 1976.