Sage Junction

Dixie Partridge

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Sage Junction

We drive the two-lane highway after a downpour, black storm moving easterly, sun slanting into whole spectrums of gray edged sterling in light through rain.
The downhill road toward Idaho glints like a long trout, and from Wyoming the highway steams faintly where a semi, streak of silver, speeds through with its shaft of wind.

I open windows to the tremble and breathe deeply: the durable gears of memory lean with my father's truck taking the curve; then the downshift to winter peril the school year a whole family died on this route linking rival basketball teams.
We gather speed in the wet desert northward, fragrances arcing through time: I leave for school and Grandmother hands me bread fried in butter, sprinkled with sugar . . . in a scent of sage white curtains of her kitchen rise like a loaf.

—Dixie Partridge