Reliquary
Shawn P. Bailey

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarsarchive.byu.edu/byusq/vol45/iss3/14

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the All Journals at BYU ScholarsArchive. It has been accepted for inclusion in BYU Studies Quarterly by an authorized editor of BYU ScholarsArchive. For more information, please contact scholarsarchive@byu.edu, ellen_amatangelo@byu.edu.
Reliquary

Moving day approaches
The accumulated things of the garage, the closets, the basement, under the bed even the back of my bottom drawer Begin to clutter my thoughts too

And moving should be a cleansing ritual
A time to contemplate household objects, to purge those not worthy of boxes or bubble wrap, Making of them an offering to the thrift store perhaps or the landfill

But some things I just can't throw away gaudy tole-painted Halloween decorations, old quilts too shabby it seems even for dogs, Considering this trash, I entertain the thought that some dead ancestor has intervened

Someone who had a body and wants it back; perhaps only this kitsch remains from A houseful of matter organized in the form of porcelain saucers and cable-knit sweaters and a kitchen table of quarter-sawn oak

Someone animated by post-mortal information A secret about what it means to put on this flesh, to exercise dominion over even the most inconsequential clod of dirt A nothing that exerts its own gravitational pull

Or maybe the knowledge that her spirit also gave this matter life Painted it by hand; displayed it every October for years this configuration not eligible for resurrection Making me remember the incorruption to come

—Shawn P. Bailey

This poem won second place in the BYU Studies 2006 poetry contest.