Appendix 3:

An Interlinear Comparison of Six Chronologies Documenting Allegedly Iran-Sponsored Extraterritorial Attempted Killings, 1979-1996

By Brian Champion and Lee Crowther

Published 13 January 2014, Revised 16 September 2016

I. Introduction

Abstract

In “Appendix 3,” we compare six of the sources cited in “Appendix 1.” While many of our sources focus on a single event, each of the six we investigate here alleges Iranian state responsibility for a pattern of attempted killings outside Iran. Due to the larger scope of the six sources, we here refer to them as chronologies.

Key

We reproduce verbatim the information given by each of the six sources for the events we document in “Appendix 1.” We highlight disagreements between the chronologies in yellow, including different spellings. We highlight anomalies in which one source disagrees with at least three others in green. We highlight information given by only one of the six chronologies in blue. Prior to each event, we list the catalog number assigned to it in “Appendix 1.” We reproduce texts in the order in which we believe they were compiled.

A Chronology of the Chronologies

We have attempted to determine the chronological order of the sources. Some of the sources do not give a date of publication; in such cases, we have used the date of last entry to determine order. The book in which Mousavian’s chronology appears was published in 2008, but the chronology itself only goes to 1996; we have considered it a 1996 chronology. The order in which we have placed the chronologies is as follows:

- 1) Foundation for Democracy in Iran (FDI)
- 2) Pahlavi
- 3) Mousavian
- 4) PDK-Iran
- 5) Kadivar
- 6) Hakakian

We compiled the text from the chronologies mostly in October 2012.

Notes on Sources

As we make clear in “Appendix 1,” some of our sources had strong incentives to oppose those in power in Iran. Some such sources are among the six featured here. By including them we do not imply that Iranian responsibility is reliably established, only that some allegation of Iranian responsibility was made.

Mousavian cites only FDI as the source for his chronology, but at times the two chronologies differ; Mousavian omits a number of events included in the FDI chronology and includes one event not referenced by FDI. We have thus included both chronologies.

When the exact date of an event is unknown, FDI lists the day as being numerically the same as the month. For example, an event that took place on an unspecified date in July would be listed by FDI as having occurred on 7/7. In such cases, FDI sometimes (though not always) explicitly notes that the exact date is unknown.

We have included some events which only appear in one of the six chronologies. This may help researchers who want to speculate about which sources were available to our sources. However, when an event appears in the PDK-Iran chronology but not in any of the other five, we have not listed it here. We justify this exclusion because (1) PDK-Iran's chronology is generally less detailed than the others, and (2) it lists over two hundred individuals not referenced in any of the other five chronologies.

We believe that some of the discrepancies between the chronologies may in part be explained by differences in linguistic and calendrical fluencies. We invite the reader to bear this in mind.

II. Texts

1.1979-01

FDI:

12/7/79 Paris, France Shahriar Moustapha Shafiq Monarchist A nephew of the former Shah. Responsibility for the killing was openly claimed by Ayatollah Khalkhali in Tehran, who says his "Islamic combattants" had also wanted to kill Princess Ashraf, the Shah's twin sister, who was living in Paris.

Pahlavi:

In 1981, my son Shahriar Shafigh is killed in Paris, France.

Mousavian:

December 7, 1979, Paris (France)—Shahriar Moustapha Shafiq, monarchist, a nephew of the former Shah, was assassinated.

PDK-Iran:

Chafigh Shabriar / Opponent / 1981 / Paris / Killed

Kadivar:

On December 7, 1979, Prince Shahriar Shafiq, the Shah's nephew, Princess Ashraf's second son, was walking on a Parisian street carrying groceries home to his sister's apartment in the Rue de la Villa Dupont, a cul-de-sac in the fashionable 16th Arrondissement.

A competent officer in the Imperial Iranian Navy and a commander of the Persian Gulf fleet of Hovercraft, Prince Shafiq had fled the Islamic revolution in a pleasure boat after a dramatic chase from the port of Bandar Abbas and across the Gulf to Kuwait.

Nine months later in Paris he was busy plotting with other exiles and his contacts in the Iranian navy to spearhead a counterrevolution from Kish Island. But any hopes that he may have had for his country ended that cold afternoon when a young man, later identified as a certain Boghraie, pulled out a 9-millimeter pistol, and shot him in the back of the head.

As Shafiq fell, the gunman bent over him, fired a second bullet into his head, and then vanished among the crowd in the Rue Pergolese. In Tehran, Sadegh Khalkhali, the revolutionary judge responsible for countless executions in Iran, announced the successful operation. "We were lucky," he told reporters. "We were after his mother but got him instead."

Hakakian:

1979: In December, the Shah's nephew Shahriar Shafiq is assassinated in France.

FDI:

7/18/80 Paris, France N/A Monarchist A failed assassination attempt against Shapour Bakhtiar kills a neighbor and a French policeman, and wounds a third person. The hit team was led by a Lebanese Christian, Anis Naccache, acting on a fatwa signed by Ayatollah Khomeini. Naccache was sentenced to life in prison on 10 March 1982 but freed on July 27, 1990 when pardoned by President Mitterrand. Iran had pressured France for his release by taking hostages in Lebanon and by orchestrating a bombing campaign in Paris in September 1986.

Pahlavi:

In July 1980, Shapour Bakhtiar escapes an assassination attempt in Paris, France. A French policeman and a neighbor are killed and one policeman is seriously injured.

Mousavian:

July 18, 1980, Paris (France)—Shapour Bakhtiar, monarchist, former prime minister, escaped an assassination attempt in which a policeman and a neighbor were killed and a third person was wounded. A Lebanese Christian, Anis Naccache, led the hit team. Naccache was sentenced to life in prison on March 10, 1982, but freed on July 27, 1990, when he was pardoned by President Mitterrand.

PDK-Iran:

Bakhtiar Chapour / Premier Ministre / 1980 / Paris / Wounded

Kadivar:

One of the most colourful leaders was Shapour Bakhtiar, a liberal and the Shah's last prime minister who had valiantly resisted the Islamic revolution during his ill-fated 37 days government.

Having fled Iran he had immediately founded the National Resistance Movement. "Iran will never die," became a famous motto for the hundreds who flanked to his side. [See "The first moderate"] Dividing his time between a busy office on the Left Bank and his elegant apartment at 101 Boulevard Bineau in the Paris suburb of Neuilly, Bakhtiar issued manifestos and tape recorded messages to his followers inside Iran calling them to overthrow the "mullah dictatorship."

On July 18, 1980, Bakhtiar was in his pyjamas fixing breakfast when a violent shoot-out broke out in his apartment between his bodyguards and Arab terrorists.

One guard, 23-year old Jean-Michel Jamme, and an innocent French lady in the building, were shot and killed. The terrorists were eventually disarmed by the French police.

In a television interview, Bakhtiar revealed that the hit men had been sent by Khalkhali and that he was aware of the threat for several months. When asked whether this attempt would change his determination to overthrow Ayatollah Khomeini's regime, Bakhtiar answered, "Nothing can stop me from fighting this barbaric regime. My only desire is to see a free and democratic Iran."

Hakakian:

1982: An assassination attempt is made on the former Iranian prime minister Shapur Bakhtiar in France.

FDI:

7/22/81 Washington, DC (USA) Ali Akbar Tabatabai NA The former press spokesman at the Iranian embassy in Washington, who became an outspoken opponent of the new regime, was shot at point blank range by a self-avowed Iranian government hitman, David Belfield, who posed as a postman delivering a special delivery package to his home in Bethesda, MD

Pahlavi:

In July 1980, Ali Tabatabai is killed in Washington D.C., United States.

Mousavian:

July 22, 1981, Washington, DC (USA)—Ali Akbar Tabatabai, former press spokesman at the Iranian embassy in Washington, was killed.

PDK-Iran (two entries):

Tabatabai / Opponent / 1980 / USA / Killed

Tabatabaei Ali Akbar / Opponent / 1985 / USA / Killed

Kadivar:

Fearful of a counter-revolution, the Islamic revolutionary secret services went into deadly action. This time they chose another Iranian by the name of Ali Akbar Tabatabai, as their target. A former press attache at the Iranian Embassy in Washington under the monarchy, Tabatabai was known as the main critic of the Khomeini regime in the United States and leader of the Iran Freedom Foundation. On July 22, 1980, Tabatabai was shot three times in the abdomen at his Bethesda home in Maryland by an assassin disguised as a postman. Forty-five minutes later, at 12:34 P.M., Tabatabai was pronounced dead at Suburban Hospital.

The man who fired the semi-automatic Browning was David Theodore Belfield alias Dawud Salahuddin, a 29-year-old African American Muslim who had been paid five thousand dollars for the job. After shooting his victim, the assassin had escaped the crime scene with the help of a friend who was waiting with the rental car, and they made their way to Montreal.

From there Salahuddin booked a flight to Paris with a connection to Geneva where he took refuge in the Iranian Consulate for seven days before getting a visa to go on to Iran where he lives today with his Iranian wife in a comfortable garden apartment in a Tehran suburb despite various attempts over the years to bring him to justice. Astonishingly, in 2001 Salahuddin, gained world fame as an actor in Mohsen Makhmalbaf's film, Kandahar.

Hakakian:

1980: In July, former Iranian minister Tabatabai is assassinated at his residence in Washington, D.C.

Kadivar:

Meanwhile, a professional army of Iranian counterrevolutionaries was taking shape on the Iran-Turkey frontier, for eventual deployment in a "liberation drive" planned by General Gholam Ali Oveissi, the commander of the imperial Iranian army. This force consisted of officers and men from elite divisions of the late Shah's military and was quartered in 22 makeshift barracks in eight Turkish villages and at five clandestine bases inside Iran.

Estimates of this monarchist force ranged from 2,000 to 8,000 men although exiled officers claimed that they could raise up two full divisions (22,000 men), provided they received financial support.

One potential source of new recruits were the 100,000 Iranian war prisoners held by Iraq to be prepared to join anti-Khomeini forces in exchange for their freedom. A stream of visitors, including colourful emissaries from Iranian Kurdish chiefs and political advisers from the exiles in Paris, created an impression of feverish activity in what was a snowbound remoteness.

On February 7, 1984, assassins shot and killed the 64 year old General Oveissi and his brother as they left an apartment in Paris. Oveissi's death dealt a major blow to the anti-mullah opposition forces. A mysterious group called "Islamic Jihad" claimed responsibility from London. The French police were never able to capture the assassins. After General Aryana's death from a heart-attack the liberation armies evaporated.

A month later, on September 17, Sadegh Sharafkandi, who succeeded the murdered Ghassemloo, together with two of his associates, were gunned down mafia-style while they ate at a Berlin restaurant called Mykonos.

German police arrested the leader of the hit squad Kazem Darabi (an Iranian) and four of the eight suspected Lebanese perpetrators and put them on trial in Berlin. The Mykonos trial lasted three and a half years and involved 246 sessions of the court, 176 witnesses and thousands of pages of documentary evidence. Despite the German Government's attempts to pressure the Court to refrain from pointing a finger at Tehran, the president of the tribunal, Judge Frithjof Kubsch, declared that the "atrocious murders" were ordered by the "highest state levels". In March 1996 an international arrest warrant was issued for Ali Fallahian, Rafsanjani's Intelligence Minister, for his role in the assassinations of Iranian dissidents in Germany.

All the European Union countries, with the exception of Italy and Greece, immediately recalled their ambassadors from Iran. But two months later, they all sent them back and started doing business as usual with the clerical regime, as if nothing had happened. In fact the Europeans preferred to appease the Islamic regime in Iran with what they called "economic incentives".
